What Are You Going To Do?

"No Association, Then What?"

One man remarked, "When you get into the problem of co-operation, you find that anything you try to do will involve a lot of trouble and expense, and you must have a lot of organization."

"Yes, but," another man said, "we have to make sure that we do not make any mistakes."

"I agree," the first man replied, "but if we don't make any mistakes, we will not be able to make any progress."

"What should we do then?"

"We should start small," the second man suggested. "We should start with a small group of people and try to get as many as possible to join."

"And then we can expand," the first man continued. "We can try to get more people to join and then we can try to get more people to join them."
