In Illinois, farmers opposed changes that would have allowed cities and towns to tax land owners based on the value of the land. This was a major issue in the 1930s, as the Farm Bureau opposed any new taxes that might increase the cost of food. The Farm Bureau's campaign against the amendment was successful, and the amendment was defeated in the state legislature. The Farm Bureau's efforts were part of a broader trend in the United States to limit the power of government to regulate the economy and to protect the interests of farmers and other rural workers.

MANY CHILDREN LOST

Others Handicapped for Life

By Common Childhood Diseases

This article is published at this time in the hope of making the parents of our state aware of the tragic facts of childhood diseases. The statistics are based upon reports of many years, and the state and county health departments are doing everything possible to protect the children of the state.

In this country in Southern Michigan the death rate of children due to whooping cough in the year ending June 30, 1929, was 176 per 100,000. The same condition in children of the same age group in the same state in 1920 was 406 per 100,000. The child mortality rate in the United States in 1920 was 57 per 1,000 in that age group.

In 1918 the United States was struck with a terrifying disease called the Spanish flu, which caused more deaths than all other known diseases of childhood put together.

The state and county health departments are doing everything possible to protect the children of the state.

Parents are often reluctant to discuss the health of their children with a physician. They may feel that the physician is only interested in finding fault or that the physician is a machine.
