Should Young Person Choose Ag'career?

VERN FREED

Michigan State University

If you are the parent of a high school student and you live in an agricultural area, you may have been bothered by this question. "Should I encourage my son or daughter to choose agriculture?" What are the opportunities in modern agriculture? Is it still a good career choice? To complicate matters, many young people have been exposed to some conflicting information about agriculture and the profession of farming.

There are those who point to the declining number of farm operators and point out that the future of agriculture is in doubt. Other people say that modern agriculture offers many career opportunities that even exceed those of the past.

Which is correct? Without question, it is the latter. There are great opportunities in agriculture.

American agriculture is an expanding industry offering many new career opportunities. But it is a changing industry. Today there are more farmers in the declining fields, with limited opportunities, than there are in the expanding career fields that are available to them. To understand modern agriculture and the career opportunities there are, one must understand the changes that have taken place. What was agriculture years ago? Today, what does it mean? How has it changed? What does the future hold for agriculture? What are the opportunities now and those that are in the future?

To those who say that the future of agriculture is in doubt, one should point out that agriculture is an industry that has been successful for many years. The growth of population has increased the demand for food. The demand for more and better food and farm commodities has made agriculture one of the most important industries in the world. Agriculture employs a large number of people and is a major source of income. Therefore, the Michigan Farm Bureau Federation has developed a program to attract young people to the agriculture field. It is called the Young Person's Agriculture Program. The program helps young people to understand modern agriculture and the career opportunities it offers. It also helps them to see that agriculture is more than just farming. It includes many other career fields, such as marketing, education, finance, and research. The program provides information on how to become involved in agriculture and help to develop a strong future in the industry.

Today in Farm Bureau

ROGER M. FORCH
Manager, Organization Division, Michigan Farm Bureau

We now have two months of Farm Bureau activity under our belts, and we find ourselves once again steeped in Farm Bureau programming — the two biggest items being membership and County Farm Bureau annual meetings.

Membership. It is a little difficult to give an accurate picture of progress to date. As you know, the weather has been excellent for winding up the harvest season. Consequently, less work has been done on membership. Many of the counties that held their membership drive the last of September have written enough new members to make a difference. The increase is encouraging.

Some notices are going out now for us to renew our membership. Have you paid yours?

Reports are coming in from many sources indicating that attendance is up at County Farm Bureau annual meetings. I hope this carries through with the Michigan Farm Bureau annual meeting.

State Farm Bureau Women are holding their annual fall district meetings. The highlights of the day have been the county activity reports, which have been interesting, and Don Kinsey's presentation on censorship and brain washing.

The State Resolutions Committee continues to be extremely active as it makes preparations for the Michigan Farm Bureau's 42nd annual meeting. It will be held September 8-10 at Michigan State University. The program is published in this edition of the New Era.

The State Resolutions Committee has spent this month to discuss several issues being held around the state. The question of whether to adopt these resolutions must be answered. There is an effort to prepare a new annual report for the County Farm Bureaus of Michigan. This report will be turned over to the State Resolutions Committee for presentation.

Michigan Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Association, under the leadership of Victoria C. Sagarin, is actively involved in membership drives. A midwestern grower group was discussing several meetings being held around the state to kick off their membership drives. There is an additional effort to show the women what is being done in the State University. This has been a very successful effort to show the women how to work with the State University.

State Resolutions Committee Holds Third Meeting

J. R. REED
Secretary, Committee

Preparing itself for the three- and four-member constitution, beginning November 9th, the Michigan Farm Bureau state constitution committee held its third meeting on November 6th.

There are seven issues before the committee: (1) Resolutions, including the adoptions of resolutions and the taking of an inventory of resolutions; (2) Membership work; (3) The highlight of the fact that we cannot all appear on certain matters that are before us, and the important issues that affect agriculture. But some resolution has been "in no great progress with that committee." However, we attended the Michigan State Senate sessions last week. Over 200 people were there.

The spirit of cooperation and the spirit of trying to work together will be much appreciated by the people of the nation. Also for the benefit of the members of the organization, the spirit of cooperation and the spirit of trying to work together will be much appreciated by the people of the nation. "All Flesh is Grass"

GEORGE D. SCARSETH
Director of Research
American Farm Bureau Federation

Editor's Note—This talk was given at the Beef Cattle-Grassland Field Day at the University of Minnesota, September 25, 1951.

These words from Isaiah are loved by all livestock people. They were first used in a talk about pastures by Dr. Firmian E. Bear at Rutgers University. Like any powerful text, it bears repeating.

Isaiah was remarkably correct. No people to my knowledge live directly on grass, although we do have some vegetables. Somewhere in the food chain of all people something green was the starting point.

We eat the steak or drink the milk that comes from the cow that eats the grass, that feeds on the soil and baths in the sun.

Man cannot eat grass. The simple reason is that man cannot digest cellulose. Cellulose is the fiber...

Questions and Answers on Citizenship

J. DELBERT WELLS

Family Political Division

Farm Bureau asks if its leaders are too busy to fulfill their responsibilities to the American public.

Q. Are Farm Bureau members真正 "leader" members or does the "community" concept apply to all members?

J. DELBERT WELLS

Farm Bureau is a community service organization and the Farm Bureau membership concept applies to all members. It is a system providing for the sharing of responsibilities and activities in an organized effort to improve the quality of life for all Americans.

Q. What are the "how and why" of political parties through contributions, and the Board of Directors of the political party of their choice.

J. DELBERT WELLS

A. The "how and why" is to get people into the political process and be informed voters. This is why we have published and are publishing "A Prescription for Success in the Citizenship Field." The Board of Directors of the political party of their choice came from a "political scene" of many years ago. The Michigan Farm Bureau is a "non-political" organization.

Q. In this program, the Board of Directors of the political party of their choice placed importance on the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects over the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects.

J. DELBERT WELLS

A. This program as outlined is a "mvita" of the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects over the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects.

Q. Are Farm Bureau members really "leaders" or are they "community" members?

J. DELBERT WELLS

A. Farm Bureau members are really "community" members and the Farm Bureau membership concept applies to all members. It is a system providing for the sharing of responsibilities and activities in an organized effort to improve the quality of life for all Americans.

Q. In the discussion on the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects over the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects, is why we have placed importance on the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects over the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects.

J. DELBERT WELLS

A. This program as outlined is a "mvita" of the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects over the "will provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going" aspects.

Q. To answer this question, we try to provide the hopes for keeping the farm business going. After some discussion it was agreed that there must be a common interest.

What Makes Good, Safe Drivers

Safe driving skills can only be perfected by using the good lessons acquired by others, the practicing them, and Fred E. Feh, general manager of Automobile Club of Michigan, Mr. Fehn introduced this series of good driving practices that are used to everyone's advantage.

1. Be good friends when you aren't. Changing lanes, depending on your own judgment, and following the highway from the driver's side pushing your vehicle, you have to turn off. Either fixed or not, your vehicle is the one that's in your turn and you will be responsible in time.

2. Use your eyes properly. Beware of everything behind your back. You may be able to anticipate and keep your eyes on what is ahead. It's a turn and you will be responsible for what is in your path.

3. Remember that the more roads you have, the more your eyes should be on the road. What is in your path should be on the road. It's a turn and you will be responsible for what is in your path.

4. ..and you will be responsible for what is in your path.

Get History Of Pullets

Pecking order should not be a problem for your heirloom pullets. Pullets need not be "sexed" to allow the farmer to know whether they are roosters or hens. The time to sex your hatching stock is at the time of hatch. Pullets should be sexed as soon as possible after hatching. If possible, use a sexing agent before the stock is sold by the breeder. If a sexing agent is not available, the breeder should sex the birds at hatch. Once a hen is sexed, it should not be sexed again.

"Moo of Everything" with Farm Bureau's Farmowners Policy!

"My new Farm Bureau Farmowners policy gives me broader coverage, plus new coverages that I didn't have before," said Mr. Cecil B. Buck of Clinton County, Michigan.

"I was previously insured in three companies under three separate policies for Fire, Wind and Liability and still didn't have all the protection of Farm Bureau's Farmowners policy," continued Mr. Buck.

"In the past, we had to pay for property damage caused by wind or fire, and have had to pay for repairs ourselves. Now, with Farm Bureau's Farmowners policy, we have complete protection against all types of losses."

Mr. Buck is one of many Michigan farmers who have switched to Farm Bureau's Farmowners policy to protect their farms and their investment.
