Members Praised for Efforts on Farm Bill

MFB members took their farm bill message to congressmen during a "Washington Fly-In" before the House vote.

As this is written, the farm bill debate continues. Even though the final outcome is unknown at this time, I will take this opportunity to thank you for your efforts on this crucial issue. Seldom in the 66-year history of our organization have we seen the kind of broad member involvement in the policy development/policy execution process as we have on Farm Bill '85, and you are to be commended for your own special contributions.

There probably couldn't have been a worse time, economically and politically, for Congress to consider a new farm bill. It's difficult enough in normal times to pass a farm bill that does not bring about more federal intervention into agriculture, but next to impossible in troubled times like these.

While I can appreciate the tremendous pressures on our U.S. representatives to "save" American agriculture by pouring more and more taxpayer dollars into farm programs and to "solve" our surplus problems with mandatory production and marketing controls, I find it difficult to understand their general lack of good economic sense. They had only to look at history to find that those commodities which have received the most federal "help" in the past are those which are in the most trouble today.

Farm Bureau members realized that economic fact of life when they wrote their farm bill and took it to Congress. It was a farm program that would gradually lead us to a market-oriented agriculture without pulling the rug out from under farmers during these stressful times. Because it was written by farmers for farmers, rather than by politicians for political reasons, it made good economic sense.

Farm Bureau is the voice of agriculture — not only because it is the largest general farm organization in the world — but because it is the only real grassroots organization, with policy decisions made by its farmer members.

Times are even more stressful now than they were when FB's farm bill was written. Yet, members at many county annual meetings this past month have reaffirmed their beliefs that the concepts written into FB's farm bill are needed to bring prosperity to agriculture. This is a good barometer that we were, and will remain, "on track."

Someone once said that FB performs at its best during a crisis. Getting a farm bill passed that will put agriculture back on the road to prosperity is a crisis situation and I'm extremely proud of how well our members have responded to that challenge. If I could, I would present a distinguished service medal to every member who, time after time during these past several months, stood on the firm foundation of their FB policy to deliver the farm bill message to our national legislators.

I would add a ribbon of valor to that medal for those dedicated members who reacted to criticism by commodity groups with positions counter to our policies by reminding them that Farm Bureau is the only true producer organization. Whether it's to our legislators (the action by some of our congressmen indicates we have some "educating" to do in that regard as well as in agricultural economics), to other members or to the general public, we need to deliver that message more often.

We need to remind them that Farm Bureau is the voice of agriculture, not only because it is the largest general farm organization in the world, but because it is the only real grassroots organization, with policy decisions made by its farmer members. Because those decisions are made by the members themselves, rather than handed down from the top to a membership that has had little or no input into them, Farm Bureau has the member commitment to execute its policies.

The Farm Bill '85 battle is not yet over, but I am confident that with your continued commitment, we will emerge victorious. The future of agriculture depends upon it.

A Memory of Thanksgiving

By Carl Gregory

When I was a youth, three days stood head and shoulders above all the rest — the 4th of July, Christmas and Thanksgiving. I have special memories of Thanksgiving.

We were always invited to Aunt Maud's. She and Uncle Fred lived in the county seat about 40 miles distant from our farm. It is remembered as a small city. It wasn't. The population was never more than 5,000. But it had sidewalks, lots of stores, a depot, beautiful homes and a water tower.

We were up at the crack of dawn on Thanksgiving morning. After chores and breakfast, we were ready for the long, cold trip to Aunt Maud's. Father put a thick layer of straw up against the cab of our old Model T truck. With several blankets over us, my brother and I were as comfortable as in our own bed.

Just before we started, father put several gunneysacks filled with cow manure on the truck for Aunt Maud's roses. The extremely bumpy roads agitated the contents just enough to let us know we may have left the farm behind, but not the barnyard. Sometimes I believe Aunt Maud was as pleased to see the bags of manure as she was to see us.

Aunt Maud's home was impressive. . . big and rambling. On two sides there was a huge covered porch with white pillars.

Inside it was truly magnificent. There were curio cabinets, polished cherry furniture, window seats with plump cushions and beautiful potted plants everywhere. The inside bathroom with its roll of white tissue was almost unbelievable when compared with our little house out back with last year's Sears catalog.

But what impressed me most of all was the huge iron floor grate in the middle of the livingroom through which heat from the coal-fed furnace was brought into the room. I would stand on the grate and feel the surge of warm air wafting upward. At a certain angle, even from across the room, I could see the rising heat. This central heating system seemed light years ahead of our woodburning pot-bellied heater on the farm. Here at Aunt Maud's I could take off my overshoes and still feel comfortable.

Thanksgiving Day dinner was something to behold. Unlike the usual midday farm meal served precisely at noon, Thanksgiving dinner wasn't ready until at least three o'clock. This guaranteed ravenous appetites for those who had breakfast eight hours earlier.

The turkey, of course, provided the centerpiece for the festive occasion, but to this day I've never seen a more impressive array of silver and tableware. There was a goblet for water, a goblet for grape juice and a goblet for jello with orange pieces and sliced California grapes topped with thick whipped cream and a big red cherry.

It was the one day during the year when a meal required two forks and two spoons.

Uncle Fred put on quite a show just before he carved the turkey. He had been a butcher as a young man, and never forgot his early training. He would pick up the big carving knife and with a theatrical flourish almost whet a tune as he applied the blade to the steel sharpening rod.

It was a Thanksgiving Day at Aunt Maud's where I first tasted olives. Not expecting the salty flavor, I immediately scooped up some potatoes and gravy to temper the taste. I was dismally disappointed. The red pimentos peeking out of the green ends had suggested a succulent exotic fruit.

Once, when I walked back through the dining room after dinner, I noticed that my mother's goblet of grape juice hadn't been touched. Thinking it a waste of such a treat, I lifted the goblet to my lips. What a surprise. Aunt Maud had served grape juice to my brother and me, but the grownups had been given grape wine. This was my first taste of wine, and I found it to be about as appetizing as the olives.

Just before dusk we would head back to the farm. Chores would be late this day. It was back to one fork and one spoon and the frigid temperature of the little house out back with the catalog.

WASHINGTON

Farm Bill '85 — Congressional action on the 1985 farm bill has been in the forefront of national news since Congress reconvened in early September. As Rural Living went to press, House action on the bill was nearly completed and the Senate was to begin consideration in mid to late October. For detailed information on the various components of the House bill, see page 10.

Farm Credit System — Farm Credit Administration Gov. Donald Wilkinson said the recent assessment by the General Accounting Office of the severity of the farm credit situation may be the catalyst for legislation to provide federal relief for the system. The GAO has projected a net loss of $2.6 billion for the Farm Credit System for the 12-month period ending June 30, 1986.

Wilkinson said it is now time for the federal government to negotiate a loan with FCS in the same manner it did with Chrysler. Such a loan could be amortized and paid back by the farmers who use the system, similar to the loan structured during the system's early years. Those initial loans were repaid in full in 1968.

U.S./Canadian Trade Agreement — Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney wants an improved trade agreement with the U.S. to give greater stability to the $120 billion bilateral trade between the two neighboring countries. Mulroney has asked President Reagan to explore the possibility of a new agreement to include the broadest possible package of mutually beneficial tariff and non-tariff barrier reductions. The request comes in the wake of continuing discussion on protectionist measures.

Farm Bill Efforts Shift to Senate

Farm Bill '85 is a top priority of FB presidents at all levels of the organization — national, state and county. AFBF President Robert Delano watches as Ottawa County FB President Curt Eubank and MFB President Elton R. Smith sign giant postcard messages to Michigan Senators Riegle and Levin. Many other members attending the Ottawa County annual meeting Oct. 10, where Delano was the guest speaker, signed the postcards which were delivered before the Senate began its deliberation of the farm bill.

Corn as Fuel — Corn was so cheap in the 1930s that some farmers burned it for fuel. Researchers at Ohio State University now believe shelled corn contains enough energy to make it a potentially economic fuel source when corn prices are low. One bushel of corn has a gross heat content of 382,000 BTUs, which equals the gross heat content of 4.2 gallons of propane. After figuring propane costs and the efficiency of capturing the heat content in corn, the new farm fuel would be worth about $3 a bushel. A special furnace is needed to burn the corn at peak efficiency.

LANSING

Uniform Commercial Code — S.B. 362 passed the Senate prior to the recess. It is now a controversial issue in the House. The legislation would permit buyers of agricultural products to take the products free of any lien. Presently, if a product has a lien against it the buyer is liable — which can result in paying twice for the product.

The only exception to the code resulted from part of the Grain Dealers' Act amendments passed last session. A procedure was set up to protect the buyer of the grain as well as the lender.

In that case, the grain producer advises the lender where the grain will be sold, the lender advises the buyer there is a lien, the buyer can then determine if a lien exists and can write a two-party check if necessary. The seller of the grain is also liable to heavy fines and jail if he fails to accurately advise or pay the lender. A farmer buying grain for his own use is free of any lien on the first $15,000.

If S.B. 362 passes in its present form, all buyers of any ag product would be free of any lien. Lenders are strongly opposed because it would remove their protection.

Farm Bureau has been in the forefront on this issue.

Wilderness Land — SCR 87, a resolution introduced by Sen. Mack (D-Ironwood), would memorialize Congress to reject legislation to designate another 90,300 acres as national wilderness areas. The land, most of which is in the Upper Peninsula, is in three of Michigan's national forests.

The Federal Wilderness Act of 1964 provides that in such areas there shall be "no permanent road . . . no temporary road . . . no mechanical transport . . . and no structure or installation." This means that these vast areas would be off limits to most people, except those who backpack. Studies show that less than 1% of the public use present wilderness areas. Such areas must be left unmanaged — even to control disease, insects, etc.

The resolution points out that the proposed designation will add to the U.P. unemployment problem, limit tourism, limit good wildlife management and harm economic growth as the U.P. is just beginning to attract an expanded wood products industry.

The resolution has passed the Michigan Senate. At the most recent hearing before the House Oversight Committee, Sen. Mack, Rep. Jacobetti and MFB staff spoke in support of the

Legislation Protects Great Lakes

On Sept. 30, Gov. Blanchard signed into law the last of four bills (S.B. 46) to protect the Great Lakes and develop a water plan. The legislation creates a 15-member temporary (two year) commission to develop a long-range plan to protect Michigan's water resources. Agriculture will be represented on the commission. FB supported the legislation and has recommended names for appointment. Pictured with the governor at the bill signing ceremony are, left to right: Jon Bartholic, director, MSU Institute of Water Research; Jim Koski, Saginaw County drain commissioner; Larry Witte, chief, DNR Engineering & Water Management Division; Carol Swinehart, associate editor, Michigan Sea Grant, MSU; Al Almy, director, MFB Public Affairs Division; Sen. Patrick McCollough, Dearborn; Sen. Mitch Irwin, Sault Ste. Marie, who introduced the legislation; Robert E. Smith, MFB senior legislative counsel; Carol Danswureau, Michigan Environmental Council; Gary Frolick, media aide to Sen. Irwin; and Nancy Woody, administrative aide to Sen. Irwin.

resolution. It was finally sent to Rep. Jacobetti's Appropriations Committee for further consideration. Opponents include various environmental groups.

FB policy, as passed by the delegates last year, "supports the multiple use principle of public land management and strongly opposes further wilderness designations in Michigan."

MI-OSHA "Confined Space" Proposals — Hearings have been held by the Michigan Occupational Health Standards Commission on proposed "confined space entry" regulations. Every employer, including farm employers, would be subject to the rules. An employer is defined as anyone hiring one or more employees for any duration of time.

"Confined space" would include silos, grain bins, corn cribs, hay mows, manure pits, fruit storage or any confined space where dust, fumes, heat, air quality or other hazard could exist, such as being engulfed by bulk material (hay, grain, fruit, etc.) or liquid.

The regulations would require entry permits, hazardous entry permits, hot work permits, etc. Other requirements would include training sessions, rescue teams, written procedures, emergency medical services, practice drills, recordkeeping, etc.

FB testimony stressed the fact that the proposed rules would not be practical in agriculture and that another major bureaucracy would be created. It was pointed out that farmers are aware of such hazards on the farm due to a variety of educational programs that have been carried out.

Taxation — FB continues to strongly oppose H.B. 4702, which imposes a new tax of 2% to 3% on premiums issued by Michigan insurance companies. This would hit farmers hard. It applies to 28 different types of policies. Some farmers have testified that they have total premiums as high as $13,000. These include workers' comp, cars and trucks, liability, health, life, fire and wind, etc.

Liability — The liability issue is finally on the front burner in the Legislature. It has been a serious issue for some time, but it has reached the point where many governmental agencies (counties, road commissions, schools, townships, cities, etc.) can no longer get insurance or it is so high that they can't afford it. Many large out-of-state insurance companies are refusing to do business in Michigan and domestic companies are not assuming the risks.

This state of affairs results from various liberal court decisions and the huge awards often given by judges and juries. The issue for governmental agencies is somewhat different from other liability; prior to 1964, governments could not be sued unless they agreed to it.

The legal term "joint and several liability" is a major problem. It can best be described by an example. It involves "comparative negligence."

Assume a drunk driver causes an accident. The plaintiff's lawyer will usually sue the road commission as well as the driver. The court may find that the drunk driver is 95% to blame but that the road commission is 5% to blame for whatever reason. Assume the jury awards $1 million.

If the driver is not collectible and has, for example, a limit of $20,000 on his insurance policy, the road commission would have to pay all the rest — or $980,000 — plus the accumulated interest since the filing of the suit. In these cases, it's the taxpayer who pays.

If the governmental unit does not have insurance then the taxpayer pays directly. The judge can order the community to bond and the bond be paid by a special added tax rate on the property in the community. This is outside of any constitutional limitations. There are at least two small communities in Michigan that have had this happen.

Two bills were introduced this past year, S.B. 327 and S.B. 328. However, over 10 new bills were introduced in the Senate on the whole liability issue, including malpractice, dram shop and governmental liability. These resulted from eight recommendations in a 67-page Senate report. Fourteen public hearings by four subcommittees were held during the summer recess.

It was found that Indiana insurance rates for such coverage are about one-fifth of Michigan's.

In the House a special committee has been studying the liability issue and is expected to issue a report soon.

Some of the reforms being considered include:

- Abolish "joint and several liability" which limits liability only to the degree of fault.
- Limit judgements by a "cap" on non-economic damages.
- Reform pre-judgement interest rules by using treasury bill rates.
- Reform court procedures and/or jury instructions.
- Reduce judgements by the amount already paid by an insurance company or other third party. Known as "collateral source."
- Grant immunity to employees when they are acting under the authority of their employer.

This issue will be very controversial due to the opposition of the State Bar, Trial Lawyers Association, and a new group called MAIM which speaks for the "rights of victims."

Swine — A new bill, H.B. 5025, would prohibit importing of moving swine into this state which have been treated with the drug chloramphenicol. This updates Michigan law. The use of the drug is presently illegal by federal law. FB supports the legislation.

---

Land Auctions — H.B. 4879 permits assessors to use agricultural land auction sales as evidence of "true cash value." FB supports the legislation.

Pesticide Management — MFB presented testimony at a hearing on Oct. 1 defending the need for farmer use of pesticides and herbicides. FB recommendations included funding of MSU's integrated pest management research and Extension information programs, and comments on "re-entry" and "protective" clothing regulations.

Soil Conservation — H.B. 4736 is a 29-page bill that merely brings the state Soil Conservation Committee into conformity with the Executive Reorganization Act. The 1965 act made the committee a type II transfer to the Department of Agriculture. H.B. 4736 makes the committee advisory to the department. The seven-member committee consists of three public officials and four farmers. The legislation has passed the House.

U.S. House Farm Bill a Mix of Wins / Losses for Farm Bureau

By Donna Wilber and
Cathy J. Kirvan

As the U.S. House completed its version of Farm Bill '85 in early October, thousands of dedicated FB members across Michigan were trying to make sense of the legislative "scoreboard." Had their valiant fight for a farm bill similar to the one they had helped write (H.R. 1965) been worth their time and effort? Had they won or lost?

A little of both, it seemed, but the general consensus was that without the grassroots member involvement in lobbying efforts, the "score" would have been much more lopsided in favor of a federal farm program with no similarity to Farm Bureau's farmer-developed farm bill.

Defeat of the Bedell marketing certificate program was counted as a major FB victory. The Bedell plan called for higher price supports for wheat and feed grains and sharply-reduced production if the program was approved in a farmer referendum. While it was called "voluntary," non-participating farmers would have been prohibited from selling their grain for use in the United States. FB opposed the plan because of its potential for expanding government intervention into agriculture, and its expected devastating effect on trade and the livestock and poultry industries.

Entered in the "loss" column was passage of dairy legislation that includes assessment/diversion programs. FB opposed the dairy bill on the grounds that dairy farmers should not have to bear the costs of programs which have failed to solve past surplus problems.

FB scored on the House vote

Michigan Senators Don Riegle and Carl Levin, with their ag aides John Graykowski and Anne Sullivan, listened intently to farm bill concerns expressed by MFB members during a "Washington Fly-In" in mid-September. The farm bill reported out by the Senate Ag Committee was considered more in line with FB policy than the House bill. FB members will now concentrate on influencing changes in the Senate bill and later in conference committee.

to continue the sugar, wool and soybean programs, but came out with a draw on the wheat and feedgrains program.

The House-passed bill continues the use of loans and target prices for wheat and feedgrains but relates them to the market, a concept supported by FB. The legislation also contains a marketing loan provision, implemented at the discretion of the USDA secretary, under which producers would receive a nine-month, recourse loan and could redeem that loan at market-clearing levels. FB opposed that provision as an untried concept.

Farm Bureau, and agriculture in general, lost an important scoring opportunity when the House approved making cargo preference apply to blended credit and food donation programs (PL 480), but did score with approval of an export bonus program (BICEP) and a $200 million increase in funding for the PL 480 program.

The House also passed conservation and credit programs in line with FB policies.

The pork and beef check-off programs without initiating referenda or opportunity for producer refund were approved. FB does not oppose check-off programs, but believes that producers involved should have the opportunity to vote in a referendum before it is initiated.

Congressional Response Disappointing

What was most frustrating to FB members in Michigan was the general lack of response by the state's congressmen to the grassroots contacts of their farmer constituents. How U.S. representatives could ignore the avalanche of cards, letters, phone calls and personal contacts from FB farmer-members supporting their organization's position is a mystery to those who contributed their time and efforts to the farm bill campaign.

On the dairy issue, only four of 18 Michigan congressmen — VanderJagt, Broomfield, Davis and Pursell — voted in line with FB policy.

Branch County hog farmer Mike Pridgeon outlined his concerns about mandatory controls for the senators. Defeat of the Bedell marketing certificate program and two other follow-up attempts for mandatory controls was considered a major victory for FB.

On the Bedell amendment, congressmen followed party lines on the market-oriented vs. government-managed agriculture issue — Democrats against FB's position, with the exception of Bob Carr, and Republicans for FB's position, with the exception of House Ag Committee member Bill Schuette.

Schuette, who is listed as a co-sponsor of FB's farm bill, voted in opposition to most key provisions of FB's proposal.

The political analysis of this lack of support for the farmer-developed policies of the world's largest farm organization was put on "hold" as FB members shifted their policy execution efforts toward the Senate. With only two "targets" instead of 18, and one of those a co-sponsor of FB's farm bill (Sen. Riegle), there were high hopes that there would be more responsiveness to the farm constituency, and consequently more responsible action by Michigan's senators.

Senate Farm Bill Action

The Senate was scheduled to begin its consideration of the farm bill in mid to late October (after Rural Living went to press), but major lobbying efforts by MFB members were launched Oct. 3 with postcard signing campaigns at county annual meetings.

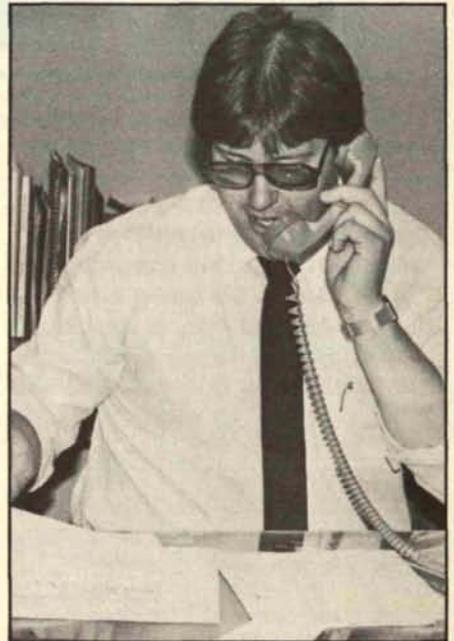

Major emphasis of the campaign on the Senate farm bill was opposition to legislation that would permit establishment of mandatory production and marketing controls, opposition to mandatory beef and pork check-offs without prior producer referenda and voluntary refund provisions, and favoring tying the dairy price support level to the level of net government purchases of dairy products, with the first price support adjustment in 1986.

Several MFB board members were scheduled to visit Washington, D.C., the week of Oct. 14 to reiterate the message carried to Sens. Carl Levin and Don Riegle by nearly 60 MFB members in September.

The "fly-in" participants, who also met with their congressmen, told the senators firsthand that they prefer a market-oriented agriculture and a farm bill that isn't a budget buster.

They asked the senators to support the provisions in S. 908, FB's farm bill.

As Rural Living went to press, FB members had high hopes that their message would ring clear in the Senate, and that, after a House-Senate conference committee ironed out the differences in the two farm bills, the scoreboard would show market-oriented agriculture the winner.

Rep. Carl Pursell (left) was visited by fly-in participants Eugene Baker, Hillsdale, Neal Sanford, Jackson, and Gene Maynard, Shlawassee. Pursell was one of only four Michigan congressmen who voted in line with FB policy on the dairy program.

AG IN THE CLASSROOM

By Marcia Ditchie

Through the use of a computer program which utilizes a "grain chomping" combine moving across the bottom of the screen, urban children in Michigan will soon gain a better understanding of agriculture.

Known as "Farm & Food Bytes," the agricultural computer program was introduced at Agriculture in the Classroom workshops in September. It is designed for fourth, fifth and sixth grade students as an enrichment exercise for language arts, science, math and social studies.

"The computer software program is designed to help students become more aware of agriculture while they learn computer skills," said Rosemary Kartes, manager of the MFB Women's Department. "The program was developed in Iowa by an agricultural task force, which included the Iowa Farm Bureau, and is being adapted to Michigan."

The program, which is compatible with Apple and IBM computers, includes five menus which correlate with regular classroom instruction. Science subjects include plant and animal identification, nutrition and animal reproduction. Math studies involve farm production decisions and the social studies segment explores careers in agriculture. The language arts section provides spelling lessons based on agricultural terms.

"The new program provides an added tool for county Farm Bureaus to work with their local schools and it is only available through Michigan Farm Bureau," Kartes said. Ag in the Classroom volunteers should contact Kartes for the computer software.

Over 140 members participated in the Ag in the Classroom workshops in Lansing and Gaylord on Sept. 24 and 25. In addition to the introduction of the "Farm & Food Bytes" program, participants received step-by-step instruction for organizing presentations and preparing themselves as presenters.

Elementary school children will soon be able to learn more about agriculture while they practice computer skills through the use of the "Farm & Food Bytes" computer program. The program was introduced by MFB Women's Department Manager Rosemary Kartes at the Ag in the Classroom workshops.

Each workshop included demonstrations by county volunteers of the presentations they use in classrooms and for on-farm tours by school children. Volunteers sharing their ideas at the Lansing workshop were Jean Creyts and Pat Tirrell, both from Eaton County, and Anne Block of Saginaw County. At the Gaylord workshop, Diana Uitvlugt of Kalkaska County, Peggy Wagner from NW Michigan, Julie Schwab of Bay and Elaine Putney of Benzie County shared their presentations.

Michigan Farm Bureau started providing volunteers with resource information 10 years ago when the "Fabulous Food Machine" slide-tape presentation was developed. The program has since been updated and is now called the "Fabulous Food Friends."

"During the last 10 years, it is estimated that over 100,000 school children in Michigan have viewed the presentation," said Faye Adam, chairperson of the MFB Women's Committee. "Other state Farm Bureaus also use it and have reached several thousand additional school children."

The purpose of the workshops this fall, Adam said, was to help volunteers sharpen their presentation skills and see firsthand what other volunteers have found to be successful in the classroom and on farm tours.

"Farm Bureau policy adopted by members nationwide states that this program and others, especially at the elementary level, are a priority. Programs like this develop an understanding of economics, supply and demand and the source of food and fibre," she said.

"Each of us has a responsibility to promote our industry — we are directly involved and we can do it best."

RURAL RASCALS

ALL SUCCESSI — Six-year-old Brooke Vander Honing and her calf relax after a fine performance in a showmanship class at the local 4-H fair. They're waiting to learn how others in the Sunshine Dairy Club of Grant did in the competition. Brooke is the daughter of Nikil and Charlotte Vander Honing of Newaygo County.

STOP! I'M TICKLISH! — Kattie and Michael Reilly pose on their back steps with pet racoon "Bumbles." Looks like Michael's not enjoying Bumbles' friendly pat on the arm. They are the children of James and Sally Reilly of Lapeer County.

U.P. Expo Includes Ag

Upper Peninsula County Farm Bureaus took the lead in showcasing agriculture at the Industrial Expo U.P. '85, held in Marquette Sept. 26-27. "Pride is running very high, since this is the first time agriculture has been included in the biannual exposition," reports Ann Jousma, MFB regional representative for the U.P.

An "All U.P. Dinner" kicked off the expo on the evening of Sept. 25. "The menu featured commodities from all U.P. counties, and the county Farm Bureaus were instrumental in making arrangements," Jousma said. "All during the expo, people were commenting on how delicious the dinner was. Many had not been aware of the large variety of commodities grown in the Upper Peninsula."

The menu included broccoli salad, roast sirloin of beef, roast leg of lamb with jelly, oven brown new potatoes, cauliflower with cheese sauce, hot rolls with honey butter and strawberry jam, and vanilla ice cream topped with maple syrup.

Chippewa County FB members prepared the strawberry jam and the honey butter was supplied in cooperation with the Copper Country FB. "Farm Bureau members in Menominee and Mackinac-Luce counties were instrumental in arranging for the donation of milk and ice cream through local dairy cooperatives," Jousma said.

An unusual mink centerpiece and "touch of mink" corsages, made by Patricia's Creations of Bark River, were provided in cooperation with Iron Range FB.

A brochure describing the scope and importance of U.P. agriculture, prepared by the Hiawathaland FB in cooperation with the U.P. Cooperative Extension Service, was distributed to everyone at the dinner.

Paula Blanchard, special advisor to the Michigan Department of Commerce and wife of

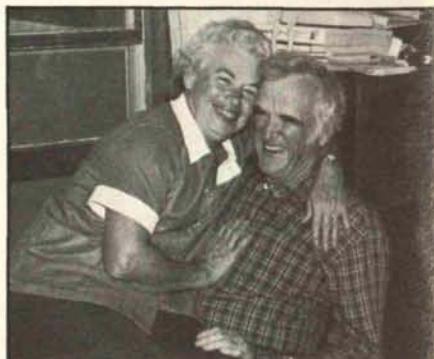

This mink centerpiece was given to Paula Blanchard following her address at the "All U.P. Dinner" during Industrial Expo U.P. '85.

Gov. James Blanchard, delivered a keynote address that saluted the Industrial Expo U.P. as a showcase for Michigan's finest products.

"In addition to the usual emphasis on industrial products, this year we are also featuring agricultural products — starting with tonight's delicious dinner," she said. Blanchard also commended FB members for their excellent promotion of agriculture at the expo.

Following her speech, she was presented with a plaque and the mink centerpiece in appreciation for her participation.

Rural Rascals Do Grow Up — And They Keep Having Fun

Clinton County farmers Bud and Army Black surprised their family when they readily agreed to pose for a "Rural Rascals" photo; Army quickly dropped her dish towel and jumped on Bud's lap. The scene probably wouldn't have surprised their fellow FB members in the Clark-Chandler Community Action Group.

Just 22 months after the Farm Bureau Services, Inc. reorganization meeting in Lansing, from which the new Agra Land cooperative emerged, shareholders approved the sale of assets to Mid-States Terminals, Inc., Toledo, Ohio, a subsidiary of Countrymark, Inc., Columbus, Ohio. Countrymark did not disclose the purchase price, but did say that the transfer would include issuance of Mid-States Terminals preferred stock to Agra Land. Officials of the two cooperatives said many Agra Land employees will be retained. Countrymark officials say they will maintain some operations in Agra Land's present office in Lansing during the transition, but have no plans for a permanent Lansing office.

The 17th annual America & Me Essay Contest, sponsored by Farm Bureau Insurance Group, is being introduced in schools throughout Michigan. # MACMA Gift Packs a 'Cherry' Good Idea for Holiday Celebrations

The MACMA direct marketing program is putting a bright, cherry-red bow on their holiday season promotions with the addition of the new Cherry Bowl Gift Pack to their line of "Michigan Farm Best" products.

MACMA Direct Marketing Manager Bob Eppelheimer, who sold the gift pack idea to Cherry Bowl organizers, says the promotion is an opportunity to package and sell more of "Michigan's Farm Best" to consumers here in Michigan and around the country.

"Wherever we talk about this all-Michigan Cherry Bowl Gift Pack," he says, "we're promoting it for holiday giving, holiday parties or as a convenient snack pack for Cherry Bowl game day."

MSU Dairy Club members have begun assembling the new all-Michigan Cherry Bowl Gift Packs in preparation for MACMA's holiday sale and orders from Cherry Bowl II sponsoring organizations.

MACMA expects to sell 3,000 of the various gift packs which will be available through the 1985 Holiday Citrus Sale.

The new gift pack includes such taste-tempting Michigan specialties as cherry nut fudge, candied sweet maraschino cherries, yogurt cherries, cherry almondine, dried cherry nuggets and cherry fruit filling. Also included are two Cherry Bowl double Old Fashioned glasses.

"Naturally, we have a standing order from Cherry Bowl, Inc. for the pack to use in their contacts with the prospective colleges and universities around the country," Eppelheimer says. Also through Cherry Bowl, Inc., Eppelheimer is offering the Cherry Bowl Gift Pack as a tie-in specialty item to sponsoring organizations.

"This is the first year that we've been able to do some complementary promotion to the Cherry Bowl. Last year, with the late summer approval of the Cherry Bowl by the NCAA, there just wasn't enough time for a lot of the Michigan businesses to develop good tie-in promotions for Cherry Bowl," he says.

The gift packs will be available to Michigan Farm Bureau members through the 1985 Holiday Citrus Sale product line. The Direct Marketing program also offers the Michigan's Farm Best Pack, Michigan Supreme Pack and Michigan Sampler. (See product information and order form on pages 16-17 of this issue.)

Like the Michigan Farm Best Gift Pack introduced just two years ago, the Cherry Bowl product pack is assembled by students in MSU's Dairy Club. The money earned by the students goes to fund club activities and projects.

Membership Growth in State & Nation Shows Farmers' Commitment to FB

"People used to say that it was impossible to get farmers to organize. They said farmers were too independent — that they would never be much good at working together because each farmer is too much in competition with his neighbor. But, today, from coast to coast and all points in between, farmers have learned to organize and to work together — through Farm Bureau."

With that statement, AFBF President Robert Delano opened his message to Ottawa County FB members at their annual meeting, Oct. 10. Delano paid tribute to the county for being first in the state to reach goal in their membership category, for achieving their all-time membership high, and especially for their gain in regular members.

"In spite of this being a hard year for farmers and ranchers, member gains by counties like Ottawa and states like Michigan add up to a projected AFBF membership gain of over 30,000 new member families," he said. "We are gaining in membership this year because farmers and ranchers generally recognize that Farm Bureau is a problem-solver — and there are plenty of problems to solve."

Delano said Ottawa's membership achievements, in a county of greatly diversified agriculture, "again proves how independent farmers can organize and act together to get things done." He also congratulated MFB on its 18 years of continuous growth.

Michigan led the nation in 1985 membership growth, achieving 108% of goal and ending the year with 92,393 member families — 9,340 more than last year — and an increase in farmer members.

Sixty-five of Michigan's 69 county FBs had a gain in membership and 52 counties surpassed their membership goal. In addition, 45 achieved target (growth in regular members).

County FB membership teams will be recognized for their outstanding contributions to the 1985 campaign at the annual County Presidents' and Campaign Managers' Banquet, Dec. 10 in Grand Rapids.

Conference to Address Ag's Future

"Competition, Survival and Profitability" is the theme of the Governor's Conference on the Future of Michigan Agriculture, set for Nov. 19-20 at the Hyatt Regency, Flint. The event is co-sponsored by Gov. James Blanchard and the Michigan Department of Agriculture. MFB President Elton R. Smith is a member of the conference advisory committee.

All persons associated with the agricultural industry — farmers, suppliers, processors, grocers, restaurateurs and consumers — are invited to attend.

"We must look for new, innovative ways to keep Michigan's vital agricultural industry growing," said MDA Director Paul Kindinger, in announcing the conference. "Now, more than ever, we need to closely examine economic policies and marketing strategies that will impact on our ability to build a stronger future."

Highlights on Tuesday, Nov. 19

The conference opens with a keynote address on "What the Future Holds for Agriculture" by Paul Hawken, author of The Next Economy.

Participants can choose from several workshops, offered once in the morning and once in the afternoon. Kansas Gov. John Carlin will speak at the luncheon on Tuesday.

•Tax Relief Programs for Agriculture — This workshop will explore how taxation and property tax reform initiatives affect the ag industry. Legislators, government leaders and tax experts will be involved.

•How Do We Assure Ourselves Agricultural Credit in the Future? — Bankers, ag credit specialists and farmers will discuss problems in the ag credit system and how changing land values and institutional rules affect ag credit.

•How to Meet the International Trade Challenge — Experts will explore the latest in research, technology and market development from an international perspective to help farmers gain and keep a competitive edge.

•Our U.S. Cheap Food Policy — Michigan congressmen, ag organization leaders and MSU specialists will discuss the factors that make food prices fluctuate, the "national food policy" and other issues that influence our country's policies and attitudes toward food.

•Increasing Profits by Saying Yes to Michigan Agriculture — Michigan has gained national attention through efforts to promote its own products. Several leading Michigan companies and commodity groups will give tips on how to make the program work.

•Agriculture and You in the Next Century — Have an impact on the future! Brainstorm with other ag industry representatives on new trends, emerging issues and challenges of the next 20 years.

Have Another Helping of Michigan-Grown Foods

The fare at the Bavarian Inn ranges from their famous chicken dinners to German specialties. Last year, the Frankenmuth restaurant served 752,000 tons of Michigan agricultural products.

By Cathy J. Kirvan

When you think of Frankenmuth, you probably think of chicken dinners or old-style German foods. But next time you visit, you may start thinking about Michigan agricultural products.

Bill Zehnder, manager of the Bavarian Inn, proudly reports that the restaurant served an average of one pound of Michigan commodities to each of its 750,000 customers in 1984.

"We choose Michigan products because they're good," he said. "We've always tried to use local products, but in the last five years or so we've really concentrated on it."

Ice cream leads the list, with 65 tons served last year. Not far behind is squash, with 60 tons served. Milk (45 tons) is next with cottage cheese and beet sugar tied for fourth at 28 tons.

The restaurant served 20 tons of cabbage, 18 tons of Spy apples (many processed with oranges and cranberries into cranberry relish), 16 tons of sauerkraut, 16 tons of pork and 14 tons of butter.

A Michigan commodity that may not lead the list in tonnage but is very popular with agricultural industry patrons, is navy beans (two tons).

"Beans are very popular in this area because so many are grown here," Zehnder said. "One agricultural group asked us to serve bean soup, bean salad and baked beans."

He said they've recently expanded the use of fresh potatoes (six tons). "We worked with an MSU staff person to find the best varieties of Michigan potatoes that hold up in our steam table set-up."

Starting this fall, Zehnder said persons attending agricultural meetings at the Bavarian Inn will know all about the Michigan products served in the restaurant. "We have a flyer that we'll use as kind of a placecard on the tables. It will let the bean grower know that we're trying to use his beans, and let the dairyman know that we're trying to use his milk products."

Other Michigan products served in 1984 include eight tons of beef; five tons of rhubarb and pastry flour; four tons of frozen apples, veal, cucumbers and soybean oil; three tons of melons, cherries and onions; two tons of blueberries, celery, strawberries, medium cheese and fresh eggs; and one ton of turkey, parsley, plums, pickles and carrots.

FBIG Begins Battle Against Claims Fraud

Farm Bureau Insurance Group's two property-casualty companies, Farm Bureau Mutual and Farm Bureau General, could save millions of dollars over the next several years through a new fraud control program.

"As with any insurance company in the United States, a certain portion of our claims are fraudulent or partially fraudulent," said Don Bradshaw, vice president and general manager of FB Mutual and FB General.

"It's a national problem, and the more we grow the more we will be exposed to it."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce reports that in 1983 more than $4 billion was paid out by American insurance companies on fraudulent claims, and that one out of every 10 claims is a fraud.

Insurance companies are developing new strategies for foiling criminals who file fraudulent claims for arson, auto theft, traffic accidents and home thefts.

"The great majority of our claims are legitimate claims filed by honest policyholders," Bradshaw said, "but the fraudulent few are costing us a lot of money. Our research shows that we can realize a substantial savings through fraud control."

The core of FBIQ's new fraud control program is a Special Investigative Unit, whose members will be highly trained in investigating suspicious claims.

The need for the unit was revealed after a thorough study of FBIQ's 1984 claims files was conducted by Gary Blair, president of Gary Blair and Associates of Columbus, Ohio. Blair's organization specializes in determining a company's exposure to claims fraud and also helps companies form Special Investigative Units.

"Fraud is a problem that insurance companies of all sizes must face," Blair said. "The problem pervades the industry. No company is immune."

Blair's training programs will help adjusters, agents and underwriters become better acquainted with the schemes used in fraudulent claims. "Awareness of fraud and how the fraud is perpetrated is one of the most important factors in eliminating the potential fraud," he said.

Last year FBIQ incurred more than $80 million in claims losses. "Even if only a small percentage of that total is attributable to claims fraud, it still figures out to hundreds of thousands — or even millions — of dollars lost to claims fraud," Bradshaw said.

U.S. Grain Quality Must Remain High to Satisfy World Buyers

Grain producers have been plagued with a host of factors that have combined to impact the market. The strong dollar, U.S. trade policy and increased world production are the principal culprits for the sharp reduction of exported U.S. grain.

As producers scramble to retain their share of the world grain market, the long debated issue of grain quality is heating up again. Quality of grain should not bear any significant blame for declining U.S. exports, however, the issue needs to be addressed in terms of maintaining what little market share is left.

The principal complaint is that grain quality is affected by handling and shipment, therefore, the grain shipped is not of the same quality as grain received. The Federal Grain Inspection Service (FGIS) has received 65 complaints, representing about 2% of shipments, from foreign buyers over the last 11 months. This is up from 24 complaints for the last fiscal year.

Even though this fiscal year shows a significant increase, it does not represent a large volume. Many of the complaints are simply not verifiable because the original integrity of the grain is lost as it moves through import channels. Reproducing the same sample drawn by FGIS once the grain has been distributed to the foreign buyer is difficult.

Take the example of a super tanker loaded to capacity with two million bushels of corn.

The drop from the spout to the bottom of the ship's hold is approximately 100 feet. As a result, particle separation will occur as loading is taking place. Lighter particles (broken kernels, foreign materials, etc.) will move to the corners; heavier particles will remain in the center. Unloading at the receiving side is usually done through a vacuum system, causing additional damage.

Furthermore, the grain is usually destined for distribution to many buyers within the importing country. It is probable that the grades and quality of grain received by end-users will not be representative of what had been shipped.

This is only one source of complaint and certainly does not absolve U.S. grain handlers from some responsibility.

U.S. grain producers, by using the latest technology in planting, cultivating and harvesting practices, are capable of producing a high quality, clean product. It must be remembered that the product is a field crop and as such, quality varies with growing conditions. It is reasonable to assume that each year quality variations will occur within a given commodity across the entire producing range.

U.S. grain handling systems are based on blending to accomplish moisture and grade standards. Many people accuse the grain trade of deteriorating the quality of good grain by blending it with poor quality grain. The grain handlers argue that they are, in fact, upgrading all grain to make everything saleable.

While most criticism of grain quality comes from the import buyer, complaints by domestic users are also received. The major complaint by the domestic buyers relates to insect infestation. This question is fairly well addressed by EPA and FDA regulations intended to protect the public.

Domestic users of grain have an advantage over export buyers because they can pick and choose supplies based on sample tests. Over the last few years, the market has generally been characterized as a "buyer's market." With the deck stacked in their favor, buyers have been able to make selective purchases.

At this point, the effort to change the system is being discussed at various levels. Producers have responded to economic signals and are delivering grain which meets minimum quality requirements. Interior elevators have recognized the benefit of this practice and export elevators learned that economic rule long ago.

The 1985 farm bill, being debated in the U.S. Congress, addresses the issue of grain quality. Amendments to the bill would forbid the addition of dockage and foreign material to grain destined for export; forbid deteriorating grain quality by blending; forbid blending grains with a moisture difference greater than 4%; re-establish moisture content as a grading standard; and establish a new grade for each type of grain that exceeds U.S. No. 1 grade.

All of these suggested changes would have a cost impact to the domestic handler/exporter. Grain handlers will resist carrying the burden of the new costs, and will attempt to pass along the cost of complying with the new standards to the producer. Before a change is implemented, there must be absolute assurance that the cost of that change be equitably borne by growers, shippers and buyers.

Senator Urges Farmers to Use Extra Care in Grain Marketing During Volatile Economic Times

A word of caution was issued to Michigan's grain farmers last month, urging them to use "prudent business practices" when marketing their grain through elevators.

An information letter issued to the state's farmers by state Sen. Nick Smith, with the support of the Michigan Grain and Agri-Dealers Association, outlined basic precautions that producers should follow.

- If you sell grain for cash, don't delay in cashing your check.

- If grain is to be stored under a warehouse receipt, try to get a receipt within 15 days. The law requires that the receipt must be issued within 30 days. This will insure at least some payment under the bonding responsibility of the elevator.

- If the grain is to be marketed under a delayed price agreement, take advantage of the new provision of the law that allows filing of the lien with the secretary of state. The filing of this notice of indebtedness will establish a priority as a creditor if the elevator should suffer an insolvency. Information and forms on how to do this are available from your grain dealer.

Michigan Farm Bureau also encourages producers to be cautious and to understand the payment provisions and current status of forward contracts or scale tickets marked "spot sale." This is important in the event of a grain elevator insolvency or bankruptcy.

For example, in a recent elevator closing a number of producers had delivered grain under a forward contract or "spot sale" agreement. However, they did not collect payment. Now these producers are considered among the general creditors in this elevator insolvency.

Additional information may be obtained from grain elevator operators, the Cooperative Extension Service, and the Michigan Department of Agriculture.

The Farm Credit System

In response to the needs of farmers, Farm Bureau has made farm credit and the crisis in the Farm Credit System (FCS) a priority policy concern.

A special FB task force has been meeting to study the farm credit problem. The task force, chaired by MFB President/AFBF Vice President Elton Smith, will make recommendations to the AFBF board of directors. In addition, Smith and AFBF President Robert Delano met Sept. 20 with Donald Wilkinson, Farm Credit Administration governor, and other representatives of the nation's agricultural lending institutions to discuss the overall farm credit situation.

Sources of Farm Credit Debt

Outstanding farm debt totals about $214 billion, of which close to $74 billion (almost 35%) is owed to the FCS. The largest single source of farm credit, the FCS consists of Federal Land Bank Associations (FLBAs) and Production Credit Associations (PCAs) within 12 Farm Credit Districts across the nation. It also contains 12 regional banks for farm cooperatives and one central bank for co-ops.

Another one-fourth of the farm debt, about $51 billion, is owed to commercial lending institutions. The remainder is divided between the Farmers Home Administration; private individuals; the Commodity Credit Corporation, for commodity loans on crops to participating farmers; and to retailers of farm equipment and supplies, for outstanding credit on purchases.

Crisis in the FCS

The FCS shifted its public position recently, from saying it was battered but unbroken and could handle its problems itself, to the admission that it will this year post its first operating loss since the system was formed in the 1930s. The FCS will probably need some type of federal government assistance within two years to avoid collapse or at least partial liquidation.

The worsening of the financial situation of the nation's largest ag lender has already precipitated some action in Congress, with both House and Senate ag committees pledging to hold hearings on the farm credit situation. Several pieces of legislation dealing with credit have been proposed, and House and Senate farm bill proposals contain credit titles.

As holder of more than a third of the total farm loans, the FCS has written off more than $600 million in the past two years — about twice as much last year as in 1983. The General Accounting Office recently projected that the FCS will have a net loss of $2.6 billion — the biggest annual deficit in banking history — for the 12 months ending June 30, 1986.

The 12 FLBAs (which deal in long-term capital for purchase of farmland and are the largest component of the FCS) could report a net operating loss this year of $350 million to $400 million. Some $6 billion of their $50 billion loan total is under-collateralized. The FLBAs reported a loss of $207 million for the first half of 1985.

Among the PCAs, 11 were liquidated in 1984 and about 50 more were merged. Dr. Charles Harshbarger, assistant director of the FCS's economic analysis division, told FB leaders meeting in August 1985 that as many as 35 PCAs across the country may have to be liquidated this year.

Farm Credit Associations Reorganize in Michigan

PCAs and FLBAs in Michigan are in the process of being reorganized and consolidated.

According to James Bremer, president of the new Farm Credit Services of Mid-Michigan, PCAs and the FLBAs were designed to complement each other's lending. In practice, however, coordination was extremely difficult because each association had different territories. For example, Michigan currently has eight PCAs and 10 FLBAs.

In spring 1982, the board of FCS's seventh district (Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and North Dakota) decided to develop common boundaries in the district. The consolidations are occurring as merger votes are held and counties are transferred according to plans approved by the state and district.

"The primary advantages of this decision are member services and financial savings," Bremer said. "Presently the PCAs and FLBAs have considerable duplication of costs and services. A common customer will find that there are two different accounting systems, two different loan officers, and in many instances, different office facilities. All that will change."

Actions By Farm Credit Administration

In early September 1985, Don Wilkinson, Farm Credit Administration governor, announced that the Federal Farm Credit Board had taken several actions in response to the credit distress in agriculture. (The Farm Credit Board, composed of farmers, ranchers and leaders

Discussion Topic

of ag co-ops, is part of the Farm Credit Administration, which is a federal agency that regulates the Farm Credit System.)

Wilkinson said that the board was concerned with the safety and soundness of the institutions it regulates, the protection of those who invest in the securities sold to raise loan funds, and with the credit worthy borrowers who depend on the system as a source of reliable credit. For some time, he said, the board has maintained that the system has the resources to take care of its own problems.

"But we put two caveats on that statement," he said. "One was the system's ability and willingness to quickly consolidate its capital. The other was that the agricultural economy would not continue to deteriorate. Recent projections have caused us to modify our position."

Wilkinson pointed out that FCS earnings declined dramatically in the second quarter of 1985, and crop reports by the USDA show that commodity prices will further deteriorate, resulting in questionable debt repayment ability and even lower collateral value. "All of this leads us to believe that the Farm Credit System is rapidly approaching the time when it will require federal financial assistance unless major new forces alter these trends. Failing that, we expect assistance will be needed in 18 to 24 months," he said.

The Farm Credit Board took two actions to deal with those problems. First, it approved regulations on an expedited basis that implement FCA's statutory authority to mandate loss sharing between and among system institutions.

"Negotiation of voluntary loss sharing agreements is simply too time consuming and costly," Wilkinson said. "And the threat always exists that some institutions may balk at approving them. The regulations will ensure that system resources are brought to bear quickly and effectively to meet system obligations to investors and borrowers when and if needed.

"We also felt this authority is necessary because it would be inappropriate for FCA to seek federal assistance until the system has made maximum use of its own resources."

The board also directed the FCA to begin discussions with Congress and the Reagan administration to enact enhanced regulatory authorities for FCA and to establish a plan for federal assistance to the system.

"In order to be a more effective regulator, FCA needs the same enforcement authorities as are held by other federal financial regulators if it is to protect the safety and the soundness of system institutions," Wilkinson said. "These include the power to issue cease and desist orders, levy civil money penalties, and remove officers and directors of system institutions."

Wilkinson said that several federal assistance alternatives need to be explored, including: use of a government guaranteed security or a guarantee on individual farm loans; a Chrysler-type loan from the federal government to the FCS; creation of a new organization or expansion of an existing mechanism to acquire non-performing real or financial assets to stabilize the decline in collateral values and to relieve financial institutions of non-accrual loans; a direct infusion of government capital into the system; and a buydown of interest rates.

Discussion Questions

- Is a federal "bailout" of the Farm Credit System needed?
- Do you think the FCS has taken all the steps it can to solve its own problems?
- Will a reorganized FCS better meet your borrowing needs?
