The Completion of Michigan's WPA Imprints Inventory¹

Nearly everyone has heard stories about government “make-work” projects during the Great Depression of the 1930s. Some of these tales describe alleged waste of taxpayer dollars and others tout the benefits of such publicly-sponsored undertakings. Whether boondoggle or beneficial enterprise, all of these endeavors had the desired effect of temporarily providing income to some of the unemployed in this country.

The agency that probably did the most to support those in need during this difficult period was the famous WPA (initially known as the Works Progress Administration but later, after 1 July 1939, as the Work Projects Administration). Though primarily into building and construction activities, the WPA also played a major role in promoting education and the arts across hard-pressed America. One highly worthwhile effort in this secondary category was the Historical Records Survey.²

Formed in January of 1936 (about a half-year after the birth of the WPA), the Historical Records Survey was designed to inventory public records in the U.S. at the federal, state, county and municipal levels, along with accounting for the archival holdings of various churches and manuscript repositories.³

In the area of employment, these exercises were conceived to provide paychecks to needy white-collar workers such as historians, librarians, archivists, teachers, lawyers, clerks, and other like-professionals. However, only a relatively few individuals from these occupational groups were able to earn some income through this program. It is said that of the “more 3,250,000 workers on WPA rolls at the end of 1938, only 2,750 held positions with the [Historical Records] Survey.”⁴

The Michigan facet of the Historical Records Survey was initiated in February of 1936 under the direction of Dr. Milo Quaife, famous author, professor, and Secretary of the Burton Historical Collection. Quaife resigned from the project on 1 December 1936 and was replaced by William Jabine. Attorney/archivist Jabine served until 1 April 1939, when he vacated the leadership post and was followed, in turn, by future-archivist and University of Michigan graduate Stuart Portner, who remained in charge until the termination of the project in June of 1942.⁵

About a year after the Historical Records Survey was inaugurated, a decision was made to expand the program by establishing an American Imprints Inventory under its supervision. The motive of this exercise was – in addition to giving work to those in need of relief – to undertake the “most ambitious bibliographical project ever attempted” in an effort to document the history of American printing⁶

This goal was to be accomplished by hiring about 2,000 unemployed white-collar personnel to visit all public libraries in the United States for the purpose of identifying and recording information about every printed item found to have been published prior to 1877. This rather strange cutoff date was mainly picked for three reasons:

1. At the time, the bibliographical work of Charles Evans had only reached 1799, despite intentions (later realized) to go further up the time continuum.⁷

2. The work of Frederick Leyboldt did not begin until the middle of 1876, leaving three-quarters of the nineteenth century in need of coverage with respect to a national bibliography.⁸
3. The year 1876 was Uncle Sam's one hundredth birthday, and it was expected that such an occasion had resulted in a significant increase in the number of printed items being generated. Thus the decision to include the American centennial within the scope of the inventory.

Each state plus the District of Columbia had an office that coordinated this mammoth undertaking (because of their large number of facilities and volumes, California and New York had two offices). Starting with the biggest repositories and then proceeding on down the institutional list according to size, the employees assigned to this job worked to fully finish one library before moving on to the next.

The procedure⁹ was for each team to go to a library's shelf list (so called because each card is arranged according to how the book is shelved) or its official catalog (one card per volume, all arranged alphabetically by author). Systematically going through one of these catalogs from front to back, the WPA staff recorded in triplicate on 3X5 cards (federal form 22 HR) every entry they found prior to 1877.

These slips were periodically bundled up by the scribes and then sent to the American Imprints Inventory headquarters in Chicago. There, the submissions were reviewed for proper format and completeness before being distributed according to plan. One copy of each slip went to the Library of Congress and its national bibliography, one copy went to the main office of the state where the cataloged book had been printed, and one copy was kept at the "Windy City" headquarters.

By the time this countrywide enterprise concluded in 1942 on account of World War II, the bibliographers had visited 10,000 libraries across the United States and produced a total of 15,000,000 records.¹⁰ These many slips eventually helped to form the basis for the National Union Catalog of Pre-1956 Imprints, a 754-volume set that collectively takes up about 130 linear feet of shelf space.¹¹

The Michigan portion of the American Imprints Inventory was headquartered in Detroit. It was established in May of 1938 with Eugenie Morrissey as supervisor. From May to December of 1939 this leadership position was held by Jacques Jean Engerrand who, thereafter, was succeeded to the end by Dr. Stuart Portner.¹²

At its maximum scope, about eighty-three people were employed by the Michigan office of the American Imprints Inventory. They ranged from clerks and typists making $60 per month to the director who earned $165 per month. Within our state they inventoried the holdings of sixty libraries and sent cards on 153,984 titles to the Chicago clearinghouse (an average of 660 imprints per day).¹³

In turn, Michigan, during the project's approximately six-year existence, received about 50,000 entries via the Chicago headquarters, these 3X5 slips representing the holdings from 366 libraries nationwide that were printed in our state prior to 1877.¹⁴ Not long after the project ended, the filled-out forms were transferred to the Bentley

¹⁴ The quality of this reporting varies greatly. Some scribes carefully recorded the full title and other particulars of each printed item while others passed on just the bare minimum. It was not uncommon for staff to substitute "&" for "and," "Mich." for "Michigan," "Est." for "Establishment," "Co." for "County," and so on. There was also a liberal use of ellipses in some quarters, especially in the case of long titles, or even a condensing of the titles without ellipses. This makes it difficult to determine if a particular item is a duplicate or a variant of a given publication.

Historical Library in Ann Arbor, where they remain housed today under the collection name “Michigan Historical Records Survey. Michigan Imprints Inventory Records, 1936-1941.”

Prior to the inception of the American Imprints Inventory, two major works had been issued that addressed the question of early books published in Michigan.¹⁵ However, these volumes focused mainly on the holdings of Southern Peninsula repositories whereas the Imprints Inventory had been national in its investigative sweep.

Therefore, one of the last acts of the Michigan Historical Records Survey was to publish a compendium that attempted to identify everything that had been [im]printed in this state (or had received an impression from our local printers) from the time of the first press run up through the year 1850.¹⁶

At the time this checklist was released, the compilers said “It is hoped that some time a second volume, listing the Michigan imprints from 1851 through 1876, will be published.”¹⁷ Unfortunately, budgetary and manpower demands of the Second World War prevented this from happening in the near term, and by the end of global hostilities the nation’s priorities had changed to other matters. Some piecemeal efforts were made in the 1950s and 1960s to continue the imprints inventory beyond 1850,¹⁸ but overall completion of the project was no longer contemplated by the government.

Because, as a reference person, I found the original Check List of Michigan Imprints to be so helpful, I long harbored a wish that someone would take upon themselves the task of completing that Depression-era enterprise. I envisioned, perhaps, some doctoral candidate from the School of Library Science at the University of Michigan picking up the bibliographic baton and carrying the project to the finish line. If this could be done, a record would be created of Michigan's publishing industry during its first eighty years of existence along with a catalogue of our state's early press production. Surely, an undertaking of this nature would have benefits to the academic community and other intellectuals.

However, over the passing years it became clear that no library-school knight on a white charger was ever going to fulfill my imprints-inventory dreams, and that if the task was going to be tackled the actor would have to be me. Consequently, in April of 2005, I arranged for Michigan's post-1850 imprint slips to be sent on temporary loan from the Bentley Historical Library in Ann Arbor to the State Archives in Lansing. There, in cooperation with the Library of Michigan, I began inputting information from the WPA cards into a database.¹⁹ Thus it should be noted that I have seen very

Washington DC: Catholic University of America, 1966. They were based upon WPA slips then available at the Library of Congress.

¹⁹ Whereas the first compilation of Michigan imprints from 1796 through 1850 was published, it was initially felt that the concluding inventory should be in electronic form. This change to a different format would theoretically allow for more widespread public access while permitting future corrections and additions to be easily made when necessary. However, the website on which this database was posted (a URL for it was created by the Library of Michigan) was seldom referenced, receiving less than 130 "hits" over a period of two years. The disappointingly few visits to the website were not, in the author's opinion, because of a lack of public interest in the subject but, rather, due to the fact that the website was mainly unknown to potential users, difficult to find, and capable of being searched just one year at a time (rather than as a whole). It was a desire to make the information herein more readily available and easier to access that ultimately led to the decision to index and publish (rather than just few original copies of the items contained in this bibliography, relying instead upon the descriptions of the materials provided by the WPA government-hired workers in the field.²⁰

While this data-entry exercise was underway, certain decisions had to be made. Some of the more noteworthy of these were to exclude all broadsides, posters, maps,²¹ newspapers²² sheet music, trade cards and single-page items from the purview of the enterprise in an effort to make the venture more manageable. Another decision was to not list the holdings of obscure out-of-state libraries when many copies of a particular book were credited to, and readily available at, repositories here in Michigan. The final determination was to include in the scope of the undertaking original items only, ignoring microfilmed, digital or photostatic copies. Furthermore, the holdings in private collections were excluded since the public could not gain access to them and the owners would likely not want to be bothered by researchers or have their rare possessions revealed.

It should be noted, however, that I did identify the printed materials held by the State Archives of Michigan (repository code MiHi) even though these items were destroyed digitize) the remainder of Michigan's WPA bibliography. It is not a rejection of changing technology to say that producing something in hardcopy will also have the benefit of keeping both old and new volumes (i.e. the entire project) together on the shelves of holding institutions around the country. Furthermore, this course of action will fulfill the expressed desire of the Michigan Imprints staff that the concluding phase of the series be published.

²⁰ Some of the slips were incomplete, missing (for instance) pagination, much of the title, or a repository attribution. These flawed items have been included in the bibliography, figuring the absence of a fact or two should not cause the whole to be overlooked.

by a 1951 fire in downtown Lansing. I did this because, over the years, a number of people have wondered aloud what treasures were lost in this blaze. By including the holdings of this institution, people will at last get some sense of the printed items claimed by that conflagration.

The next matter to be determined was whether to identify holding institutions by the old Library of Congress letter abbreviations or the newer Online Computer Library Center (OCLC) codes. Since the original WPA slips employed the Library of Congress symbols (also known as National Union Catalog symbols), it was decided to stick with these keys.²³ A complete list of these codes and their meaning can be found at www.loc.gov/marc/organizations/org-search.php²⁴ or in volumes 560 and 754 in the National Union Catalog of Pre-1956 Imprints.

A decision was also made to keep the cataloging format used in the original study. Since the 1930s, the ways of describing printed materials and presenting information about them has changed somewhat. Nevertheless, it was determined that nothing would be lost by remaining true to the configuration of earlier times, thus keeping this volume in stylistic agreement with the initial release for the period 1796-1850. The arrangement of the first volume was also adhered to, with the listings in chronological order and then alphabetical by author within each year. There was, however, a change made to the end of the book. Whereas the much smaller volume-one included separate indexes for 1) printer/publisher, 2) place/location, 3) title, and 4) subject, given the limitations of space and cost only the personal names in this work have been put in a single alphabetical index. The contents of the index are keyed to entry identifier code rather than page number.

Perhaps the most significant decision was whether or not to add subject headings to the listings. The original WPA slips did not have subject entries. Furthermore, since in most cases the book being described was not available at the moment of data entry, the subject of the book would sometimes have to be guessed at if this was not readily apparent from the title. These factors – and the lack of time to check all possible entries in the multi-volume Library of Congress list of official subject headings – worked against the inclination to add a new thematic dimension to the project. However, to not include some kind of topical assessment would have limited the usefulness of the final product. Therefore, I decided to create my own general subject headings for the slips in the interest of saving time while still permitting an analysis of the listings. The subjects chosen (to be revealed later in this text) were all in response to the types of material encountered.

My work on this inputting assignment commenced in 2005 and continued until its completion at the end of 2012. At that time, a statistical analysis was performed of the database thus created. What was learned from this evaluation is that – of the materials known to have been printed in Michigan between 1850 and 1877 – 62% were pamphlets (defined as 50 or fewer pages), 33% were books,²⁵ and 4% were periodicals. It is the author’s opinion that the American Imprints Inventory slips comprising this study account for nearly ninety percent of all materials identifiably printed in our state during the third quarter of the nineteenth century. The antiquarian paper that remains outstanding will be almost entirely pamphlets (particularly of a religious, fraternal and educational nature); business trade catalogs;²⁶ law briefs (mainly court filings with county circuit courts and federal district courts in Michigan); and periodicals. The latter two categories – legal matter and non-newspaper serials –were a particular weakness of the WPA canvass.²⁷

A total of 52 homemade subject headings were required to describe the materials printed in Michigan between 1850 and 1877. These topical labels are not included with the descriptions of the individual entries that comprise this text, but have been created simply for the purpose of better understanding the nature of Michigan’s press productions during the period under consideration. The various themes are as follows, along with the number of times they appear in the bibliographic population:

²⁵ A figure that is not surprising, given the fact that most Michigan presses of this era referred to themselves as “Book and Job” printers.

²⁶ Examples of this genre can be found in Lawrence B. Romaine’s Guide to American Trade Catalogues 1744-1900.

From the overall standpoint of subjects, court papers of various kinds predominate, accounting for about 17% of all items known to have been printed in Michigan. Coming in a close second, also with 17% of the total, are publications of an ecclesiastical nature, being “Religion” and “Sermons” combined. Third place is claimed by materials in the realm of Education (11%) followed by “Medical” plus “Health” (6%), “Masonic” and “Fraternal Organization” (5%), and “Government” (4%). Concluding the top-tier of popular subjects from Michigan’s presses are articles pertaining to “Law” and “Railroads” (3% each) along with “Business.” “Biography.” “Directories,” and “Finance,” all at 2% of the total. The remaining 37 subjects together account for 26% of the compositions printed in Michigan between 1850 and 1877.

Not surprisingly, this study shows the publishing capital of Michigan was its biggest city, Detroit, which accounted for about 38% of all printed items discovered by the WPA Inventory. The future “Motor City” was followed in order by Lansing (17%), Ann Arbor (7%), Battle Creek (6%), Kalamazoo (4%), and Grand Rapids (4%). The numerical breakdown by frequency of titles from the twelve most common places of origin is revealed in the following sequence:

The largest publishing houses were the state printers in Lansing. Among these, the biggest were (in descending order) the three separate firms of Messrs. George, Kerr and Hosmer, with William S. George & Company alone accounting for 9% of all imprints. As for secular enterprises not affiliated with government, the greatest were the Detroit Free Press (5% of all printing) and the Detroit Tribune in its various manifestations (4% of the total). Outside of Lansing and Detroit, the most represented establishment was the press run by the Seventh-day Adventists in Battle Creek which generated a little over 4% of the entries in this study.⁴¹

There were 108 Michigan-based publications between 1850 and 1877 in some language other than English. The number of titles and their respective “tongues” are shown below. Such printed items were usually of a religious nature. For the most part, these foreign-language publications have been translated in the listings to aid users with their research:

Concluding with an overview, the graph on the next page shows the number of items in this compilation that were printed each year. At least three things stand out from the ensuing picture. First, and not surprisingly, production increases gradually over time. Second, the Civil War caused a slight decline in this ongoing upward trend, as Michigan resources and manpower were channeled into supporting troops in the Union Army. And third, those bureaucrats who designed this WPA study were certainly correct in thinking that our nation’s centennial would result in an up-tick in the number of publications generated in 1876.

These foregoing analyses and the experience of working with the WPA recording slips give me a basis for evaluating the merits of the imprints inventory. Perhaps the most telling statistic is that, of the approximately 6,200⁴² Michigan items located by the canvassers, almost 40% are known to exist in just one holding institution. This shows the degree to which rarities (called unica) were uncovered by the depression-era catalogers and how few copies of our state's early press productions have been saved. Furthermore, a substantial number of these rare items are attributed to repositories outside of Michigan. One can only hope that, after the passing of many decades, the holding institutions still have these materials and have not discarded them as being foreign to their collecting themes or beyond their geographical areas of interest.

Another example of how unusual some of these discoveries are can be gained from Allegan's renowned Larry Massie. Larry is one of the most knowledgeable bookmen in our state or even the Midwest and he possesses an extensive assemblage of Michigania. When told that the small town of Buchanan ranked eleventh in the state in terms of the number of titles produced between 1850 and 1877, he replied that after many years of collecting in southwestern Michigan he had in his holdings just one imprint from that community.

In addition to bringing to light some publications that have long been forgotten, the 3X5 cards from the WPA project have another value. Archivists and librarians like to find and use the full name of an author when engaged in cataloging plus their birth and death years. In some cases, however, this information has been lost to the ages. Because the Imprints Inventory took place about seventy years ago, some of the desired “main entry” facts for books were available back then and they can now be recovered from the database.

⁴² Previously in the text I indicated that 50,000 slips were prepared for Michigan and here I say there were about 6,200 total entries. This apparent discrepancy can be explained by the fact that in most cases there were multiple slips for a given volume. For example, some books of Michigan origin were so common they might be held by fifty or more different libraries across the country. This means there would be dozens of slips for that particular book, at least one from each holding institution.

Individuals who feel that paper records are passé in this digital age may think that with MeL (Michigan eLibrary) and WorldCat (OCLC) this old WPA bibliography is unnecessary or out-of-date. This assessment would be inaccurate, as I found many entries in the imprints inventory that were not in any of these modern electronic bibliographic databases. In fact, my observations on the degree of differentiation between the old and new access tools correspond quite closely with the findings of others who have studied this phenomenon in similar contexts.⁴³

Where can the items in this inventory be found? While the letter codes reveal the holding institutions in each instance, the richest collections of Michigania are concentrated in five locations. These repositories — in approximate ranking order — are The Burton Collection of the Detroit Public Library; The Bentley Historical Library at the University of Michigan; the Library of Michigan in Lansing; the Clarke Historical Library at Central Michigan University;⁴⁴ the Library of Congress in the District of Columbia; and the American Antiquarian Society in Worcester, Massachusetts.

When the first volume of Michigan’s Imprints Inventory was published, it was subsequently distributed to libraries, historical societies, schools, and government offices in-state and around the country. Now that the second and last half of the project is available, the WPA effort to account for Michigan’s early press production can at last be considered complete. Bibliographers, book collectors, antiquarians, archivists, educators, writers, biographers, genealogists, historians, librarians, museum curators, scholars, dealers in rare nineteenth-century paper, information providers, editors, reference personnel, and all other interested people can find the final chapter in this story between the covers of these compiled volumes.⁴⁵

The author wishes to thank the staffs of the Bentley Historical Library, the Archives of Michigan, and the Library of Michigan for making this undertaking possible. Many other people in Michigan and around the country contributed to this compilation, but their numbers are too great to mention individually given the space limitations of a book that is already coming close to exceeding the number of pages (and volumes) affordable to potential buyers. Though these many behind-the-scenes contributors do not receive personal mention here, they should know that their roles as supporting cast members is greatly appreciated.

I must make just a few exceptions to the policy of not recognizing by name those individuals who have rendered valuable assistance to this enterprise. Specific reference should be made to: Kevin Driedger and Don Todaro of the Library of Michigan for their crucial enabling assistance in the initial stages of this enterprise; translators William Johnsen of Michigan State University, Michael Andrews of Lansing and Alida Kuipers of Holland; computer-master Jonathan Stars and publishing specialist Ruth Ann Jones (both of Lansing); facilitator Julie Loehr of the Michigan State University Press; George Livingston (of the Battle Creek Public Library) for his support of this bibliographic exercise; my wife, Dorothy, without whose frequent help and unfailing forbearance this book would certainly not exist. Any errors in this work should reflect poorly upon yours truly and not on the many people who contributed to the cause of bringing this reference tool to fruition.
