Winter or summer, your chief concern is family health. Your lively interest in food news helps you plan menus to provide adequate vitamins and minerals for good health—and you know that the foods you serve your family help to protect them from infections and diseases.

Vitamin C is a most important nutrient. It helps build resistance to colds and infections. For that reason,—and because everyone likes lemonade—more and more homemakers serve this popular beverage daily. Lemonade is a valuable source of Vitamin C and should be served often to provide this essential vitamin which cannot be stored in the body.
