

HRS, FOLLRES TWILIEHT STORIRS.

> 1. - TREE STORIES ABOLT DOGS AND CATS. 2. M MDETIP ERORIES.
s. - Fil OLD garabi. PART I.
5. - THE OLD GABBER. PABT II.
a - TEE OLD garagt. PART IIL

If these boolas plave the Iitle Roys nnal Girts it is the intention ef the Pahlichers by alt els mere to the werlen, making twelve in alt, tand firming a very fevty and wolat litule Ditirary.

THE PEDLER

> or

BY MRS. FOLLEN.

30:h 7.hestrations by Btingg.

BOSTOS: WHITTEMORE, NILES, ic HALL. 1856.

 Mumpensh Tita, 4 Tus,

THR

PEDLER OF DUST STIOKS.

Oss day I went to visit a friend, a lady, who came from IIamburg, in Germuny. I was much plensed with a portrait which was hunging up in her room, and I was particularly stenck by the ormmertal druwisggr with whiek the picture was surrounded. They consisted of whip handies, canes, piano keys, mouthpieces for wind instruments, all sorts of umbrellas, and many more things, of every sort, made of cane and whalebone. The arrangement was so ingenious, the desigus so fanciful, and the exeoution so good, that nothing could be prettier. But what of course whs of the most importance, was the face and head that they were meant to ornament. "What a benevolent, what a beautiful face!" I said, "Who is it!"
"My father," the lady replied; "and he is more beantiful than the pricture, and be is still more lind than he looks there."
" What is the meansing of all these bits of bamboe and these little canes, so fincifully arranged aronad the picture?" I ashed.
"These little sticks," whe replied, "tell the stry of my father's maceess, and of the beginning of his greatness. He began his noble und honomble life as a little Peuler of Dust Sticks."
"Pedler of Dust Sticks ?"
"Yes," she said; " if you would like to hear his history, I will relate it."

I replied that nothing could please me better; that I considered the life of a good, great man the most beautiful of all stories.
"I will tell it to you just as it was; and you may, if you please, repeat it for the benefit of any onc."

When I hat returned home I wrote the story down, just as I remembered it, as she had given me leave to do.

The Christian name of our hero was Henry, and so we will call him. His parents lived in Hamburg, in Germany. They were very poor. His father was a cabinet maker, with a very nmall business. Henry was the second of eight children. As soon as he wis eight years old, his father, it order to raise af few mate shitlings to support his family, sent him into the streets to sell little pieces of ratan, which the people there use to beat the dust out of their clothes.

Henry got about a cent and a half apiece for the sticks. If he sold a great number of these little sticks, he was allowed, as a reward, to go to an evening school, where he could learn to read. This was a great pleasare to him; but he wanted also to learn to write. For this, however, something extra was to be paid, and Henry was very anxious to earn more, that le might have this advantinge.

There is a fine public walk in Hamburg, where the fashionable people go, in good weather, to see and be seen; and where the young then go to wait upon and sec the ladies These gentlemen were fond of having little canes in their hands, to play with, to switch their boots with, and to show the young Indies how gracefully they could move their arms; and wometimes to write names in the sand. So little Henry thought of making some very protty canes, and selling them to these young beaux.

THE TEDEER OF DUST ETICKS.

He soaked his canes for a long time in warm water, and bent the tops round for a handle, and then ormmented them with his penknifie, and made them really very protty. Then he went to the public walk, and when he saw a young matr walking alouc, he went ap to him, and with a sweet and plensant voice, he would say, "Will you buy a pretty cane, sir? Six cents apieces."

Almost every gentlemass took one of the caness

With the money be got for his canes he was able to pay for lessons in writing. This made him very happy, for it was the reward of his owns industry and ingenuity.

As soon as Henry was old enough, his father employed him to carry home the work to customers. The boy had such a beautiful courtenance, was so intelligent, and had such a pleasunt masner, that maxy of the custormers wantod to have him come and live with thent, and promised to take good care of him: but Henry always said, "No, I prefer staying with my father, and helping him."

Every day the little fellow would take his bundle of dust sticks and little canes in a box lee had for the purpose, and walk up and down the streets, offering them to every one who he thought would buy them. And happy enough was he when he sold them all and brought home the money to his poor father, who found it so hard to support a large fumily.

All the evenings when Henry was not so happy as to go to school, he worked as long as he could keep his eyes open.

He was very skilful, and made his canes so pretty, and he was such a good boy, that he made many friends, and almost always found a good market for his sticks.

The poor fellow was very anxious to get * money. Often his father's customers gave him a fow pence. Once he came near risking his life to obtain a small sum. He was very strong and active, and excelled in all the common exercises of boys; such ns rumning, jumping, &e. One dny he grot up on the toty of a very high baggage wagon, and called to the boys below, and ssked them how many pence they would give him if he would jump off of it to the ground. Some one offiered twa

12 THE PEDLEAK OF PUNT ETICKE.
"Two are too few to risle my life for," he replied.

They then promiged to donble the number: and bo whs upou the point of jumping, when he felt a stuart slap on his back.
"That's what you shall have for risking yonr life for a few pence," mid his father, who, unobserved by Henry, had heard what had passed, and elimbed ap the wagon just in time to save Henry from perhaps lreaking his neek, or at least sotuc of bis limas.

Henry was very fond of skating, but he had no skates, One day, when the weather and ice weme fine, he wenk to see the akators. He had only a few pence in his pocket, and he offered them for the use of a pair of skates for a little while; but the person who had skates to let could get more for them, and so he nefused poor Henry. There was near by, at the time, a man whose profession was gambling; and he said to Henry, "I will show you a way by which you can double and triple your money, if you will come with me."

Henry followed him to a little booth, in which was a table and some chnirs ; and there the man taught him a gambling game, by which, in a few minutes, be won a dollar.

Henry was going away with his money, thinking with delight of the pleasure he should have in skating, and also of the money that wonld be left to corry home to his poor finther, when the gambler said to him, "You foolish boy, why won't you play longer, and double your dollar? You may as well bave two or three dollars as one." ${ }^{-\alpha}$

Menry phayed again, and lost not only what he had won, but the few pence he had when he came upon the ice.

Henry was fortunate enough that day, after this occurrence, to sell a few pretty canes, and so had some money to carry to his father; but still he went home with a heavy heart, for he knew that he had done a very foolish thing-

He lad learned, by thiv most fortumate ill luck, what gambling was; and he made a resolntion then, which he faithfully kept through his whole after life, never to allow any poverty, any temptation whatever, to induce him to gramble.

Heury continually improved in his manufacture of canes, and he often sucecoded in getting money enough to pay for his writing Inssons.

There were Jews in the city, who sold canes as he did, and he would often make an exchange with them: even if they insisted upon having two or three of his for one of theirs; be wouks comsent to the bargain, whes ho could get from them a pretty cane; and then he would carry it home, and imitate it, so that his canes were much admired; and the little fellow gained customers and friends too every day.

The ban boys in the city he would have nothing to do with; he treated them civilly, but he did not play with them, nor have them for his friends. He could not take pleasure in their society.

16 TIIE PRBLEA OF DU'ST BTICKE.

Henry wias a great lover of nature. He opent much of his 1 He oot in the open air, monder the blue nkies; and he did not fail to sotice what is grand and beansifus roof there was over his head. The clouds by day, the stars by night, wese a coutinued delight to kim. The warm susshine in winter, and the cool shate of the trees is sumuer, be enjoyed more than many a rich bay does the splendid furniture and pietates in his father's house.

One beantiful summer afternoon he was going, with his canes on his shoulder, through the public promenade on the banks of the little bsy around which was the public walk. The waves looked so blue, and the air was so delicious, that he was resolved he would treat himself to a row upon the sparkling wuters: so he hired a little boat, and then got some long bronches from the trees on the shore, and stuck them all around the edges of his boat, and tied them together by their tops, so as to make 2

15 THE PEDLER OF DUET FTICKS,

an arbor in the boat, and got in and rowed himself about, whistling all the tunes he knew for his music, to his heart's content. He went nlone, for he had no companion that he liked; and he would have none other.

At last what should he see but his father, walking on the bank.

Henry knew that his father would be very angry with him, for he was a severe man ; but he detectuined to beac his punidhment, let it bo what it would, patiently; for he knew, when he went, that his father would not like it; and yet he said, in telling this story to a friend, "I wus so happy, and this pleasure was so innocent, that I could not feel as sorry as I ought to feel."

Heary bort his puniahment like a brave boy.

It was too bad for the poor fellow to have no pleasures; nothing but work all the time. This was especillly hand for him, for no one loved amusement better than he.

He relished a piece of fun exceedingly. In the city of Elumburg there was a place where young girls were always to be eeen with flowers in their hands to sell. He had observed that the Jews, of whom he bought the pretty canes, were often rude to them, and he determined to punish some of them. There was one whe wore a wig, with a long queue to it. The giris had their long hair braided and left hanging down behind.

One day this man was sitting in this flower masket, with his back to sne of these girls. and Henry took the opportunity, and before either knew what he did, he tied the two queues together; the young girl happened not to like her seat very well, and got up rather suddenly to change it, and off she went with the Jew's wig dangling behind her, much to the amusement of the spectators, and especially of Henry, who saw and enjoyed it all highly, though pretending to be very busy willing a cane to a geatleman, who joined in the general laugh.

Lucky it was for Henry that the Jew did not discover who it was that had played this roguish trick.

Heury saw how difficult it was for his fither to support the family, and was very earnest to get money in any honest way. One day the managers of a theatre hired him to take part in a play, where they wanted to make a crowd. He was pleased at the thought of making some money to carry home; but when he went behind the scenes, and saw all that the actors did, he ran away and left them, caring not for the moncy, so he could but get away from such disgusting thinga

Thus did Heary live, working from early morning till night, going to school with a little of the money he had earned, when his father would allow him to take it; keeping himself unstained by the wickedness that be often saw and heard in his walks through the city : observing every thing worth noticing, and making friends every where by his honesty, purity, and kind-heartedness.

At this time the French were in Hamburg, provisions were dearer than ever, and Henry's futher, with all the help he received from his son, could not support his family in the city.

One day he called Henry, and said, "Do you think you could support your mother and younger sister and brother in some other place?" Henry roplied directiy, "Yes, dear father, I can: at least, I will try." So his father sent him with this part of his fantily to a cheaper place, about fifty miles inland. He gave hiva fixe dollars sud bis blesritig, as they parted.

Kere was oar friend Hesxy is a strange town, a small place, with no friends there, but just fifteen years old, and with his mother, and brother, and sistor depending upon him for their daily bread.

Heary was a brave boy; so he did not nllow himself to feur. With his five dollars he secured small, cheap rooms for a week, bought some bread and milk for the family, and after a good night's sleep set out, the next morning, to obtain work. He went into the street, and ufter a wbile read upon a sign, "Furniture varnished." He went into the shop and asked for work. The man asked him if he could varnish well. Henry replied, "Yes, I can." He was very skilful, and he had varnished his canes sometimes, and he felt sure be could.
"You came from Hamburg ?"
"Yes, sir."
"Perhaps you know some new and better way than we have of varnishing ?"
"What method do you take?" anked Henry. The man told him.
Here Henry's habit of observing was the means of his getting bread for himself and family. He had noticed a new and better way that vamisbere empleyed is Famburg, and though he had not tried it with his own hands, he was sure he could imitate what he had seen. He said that he knew a better way. The man engaged him for a week, and was tunch pleased with bis work; he did not want him long, but gave him a recommendation when he parted with him.

After this Benry went to the baker of whom he had bought bread for the faunily, and asked him for employment. The baker told him he wanted his house painted, and nsked him if he could do it.
"Yes," said Henry, " I can do it well, I know."

The baker liked him very mach, and gave him the joh withont any hesitation.

The baker's apprentices had noticed what a good fellow Herry was, and would often give him, in addition to the loaf for the fanily, some nice cakes to carry home. So he was, as you see, now working among frienda.

Henry had never painted before; but he had observed painters at their work, and he did it well. He soon became known to all the people of the town, and made many friends. He was never idle. Ho made canes when he had no other work. He varmished, or painted, or did anything that he could get to do, and supported the whole family corafortably for two years.

At the end of this time, his father sent to him to bring the farnily home to Hamburg. Henry left without a single debt, and in the place of the five dollars carried home ten to his father.

I must tell you of a piece of Henry's economy and self-denial. He grew very fast, and his boots became too small for him. While he was getting every tioing comiortable for others, he devied himself a pair of new boots, and used to oil the old ones every time he put shem en, to as to be able to get his feet into them, and never complained of the pain.

Onr hero - for I am sure be was a trae Wero-was now seventecs. The Freach bad left Hamburg when he returned, but it was still necessary to have a body of soldiens to protect is, and be joined a congs of young mesh. They made him distributer of provisions. His office was one given only to those known to be bouest and worthy of contidence. The citizens began even then to show their respoct for the little pedler of dust sticks and canes. We sluall see wbat het was yet to be.

Henry returned to cane-mnking, to which be and his father soon added work in whalebone. They were pretty successful, but, as they had very little money to purchase stock and tools, could not make a great business.

It was about this time that Henry became acquainted with one who was to form the greatest happiness of his life. There was a poor girl in Hamburg who was a seamstress, and who not only supported herself but her mother by her needle. Her name was Agathn. She had a lovely face and very engaging manners ; her character was still more lovely than her fice; and she had only these to recommend her, for she was very poor. Henry became strongly attached to her, and she soon returned lis love.

Heary's father and mother did not approve of this conmection becanne the girl was very poor; and as their son was so handsome and agreenble, had now many friends, and was very eapable, they thought that he might marry the daughter of some rich mas perhaps, and so get some money. But, although Henry was ready to jump from a wagon twenty feet high for a fow pence, and wonld walk the streets of the city twelve hours a day for money, he would not so disgrace himself as to give that most precious of all things, his heart, for gold, and so bue told his purentis.
"I shall," said he, " marry my dear Agatha, or I shall never marry any one. She is good, and gentle, and beantiful; and if I live, she shall have mosey enough too, for I can and will earn it for her. I shall work harder and better now than I ever did before, because I shall be working for one whom I love so dearly."

Beury's parents saw that it was in vain to oppose him, that it would only drive him out of the house, and that they should thus lose him and his work too; so they gave the matter up.

From this time Henry worked more industriously, if possible, than ever. He did the same for his futher as before: but he contrived also to find some hours in which he might work for himself exclusively. All that he earned at these times he devoted to his new and dearest friend. He would purchase with the moncy he carned some pretty or comfortable thing to wear that she wished and had denied herself; or sometimes he would get some nice thing for her to eat; for she had delicate health, and but little appetite.

After work was done in the shop, and the family had gone to bod, Henry used to hanitom to his dear Agatha, and pass two or three happy hours with ber. They both had fise voices, and many ans hour they would sing together, till they would forget the weariness of the day, and the fact that they had nothing but their love for each other to bless themselves with in this world. They worked harder, they denied themselves more than ever, they were more carcful to be wise and good for the salee of each other; and so their love made them better ns well as happier.

At last, whess Heary was ninetees, his parents consented to his marrying and bringing his wifo home to their house. As there was no money to spare, they could only have a very quiet wedding. They were married without any parade or expense, and never were two excelleat beings haypier thas they.

32 THE PEDLER OP DUST EJTCKIS

The young wifo made herself very urefnl in her husbaud's faurily. Ske warked very laned, -her husband thought harder than sher ought to work, - and be was anxious to be itules pendent, and have a house of his own, where he could take more care of her, and prevent her injuring herself by labor.

There was some money due his father in Bremen ; and, after living at home a year or so, Henry took his wife with him, and went there to collect the money.

There they lived two years, and there thoy suffered severely. They were very poor, and they met with misfortunes. At last Henry's wife and their two childron took the small pox: but they all lived and got well, and their love for each other was only made more perfect by suffering: for they learned patience and fortitude, and were confirmed in what they both before believed, that they could bear any trouble if they could share it together.

At the end of the two years, they returned to Hamburg. During their abvence, Henry's mother had died, and his father had marricd a woman who had a little property.

Henry now folt no longer anxions nbout his family, and sot up for himself in the cane and whalebone business. He took a small bowse, junt big enoogh for his farnily, and they invital hir wife's sister to live with them mad assist in the work.

Henty was very desirous of setting up a cane and whalebone factory, and doing busi-neas upon a larger scalc, but had not the micuns is olotain suifable maclinery. Ife wisued is large boiler, but it was too expensives, and be knew tuot what to do. Hese bis excelleut eharacter was the canse of his success. A genteman who had known him from the time when be used to carry abont dust sticks to sell came forward and offered him a large boiles, and told him that he might pay for it whenever he conld conveniently. Henry accepted the kind offer, and commenced business directly.

His eld customers all came to him, and in a short time he was able to hire a man to lielp him. It was not long before he wanted another, and then another mati. Every thing prosperexl with lim. Het made monuy fast. His business grew larger constaptly, He did all sorts of work in whalebone and caue; now he sadind ivory, umbrelin sticks, keys for pimos, canes, und whip hapalles, and made all sorts of things in which these materials ase used. Henry was so well nequainted with his business, so industrious and faithful, was known to be so honest and just in liss dealings, and was so kind in his trentment of his workmen, that all who wanted what he could supply went to him, and his sucoess was very great. He grew rich. It was not a great while befors he was able to build a large factory in the neighborlood of the city.

The little pedler of dust sticks was now one of the sichert wes in Kambistg. We ban four bundred men in his employ, had a large house in towns, and another in the cotuntry. He was thus able to indulge his love for nature. After a hand day's work, he could come home and exjoy the beautiful sunset, and look at the moon and stars in the evening, and hear the nightingale sing, and join with his Agathn in the song of praise to the Giver of all good things.

Henry did not, because he was rich, lead a lazy and selfish life. He still worked with his own hands, and thus tanght his worknen himself, and made their work more easy and agreeable by hirs presence as well as by his instructions. He was continually making improvements in his busivess, inventing yew things, and so kecping up his reputation. He exported large quantities of the articles monle in his fistory. Every year his basiness grow lager, and be goined still bighes repotation.

Henry's fellow-citizens offered him some of the highest offices of honor and profit which the city had to bestow; but he refused them. The only ones he accepted were those that gave no pay. He was one of the overweers of the poor, and was always one of the first to aid, in any way he could, plans for the benefit of his suffering fellow-beings. He gave moncy himself generously, but was very anxious not to have his charities made public.

He was one of the directors of the first nuilroad from Hamburg.

He engaged all his workmen with reference to their character as well as their eapacity, and no one of them ever left him. He was their best benefictor and friend.

So lived this excellent man, as happy as he was good and useful, for sixteen years with his dear wife; they had seven living children; but, as I before told you, she had very delicate health, and it war the will of God that these two loving hearts should be reppanted in this world, as we hopes, to moet ist bescess to yart no mors. After sisteen yours of perfies love and joy, he parted with his dear Agathil.

Henry bore his sorrow meebly and puitiently. He did not sprouk, he could not weep; but life was never again tho same thing to him; he never parted for a moment with the memory of his loxing and densly-beloved wilc. He was then ouly thirty-five years old, but he never married again ; and when urged to take another wife, he always replied, "I cannot murry again." He felt that be was married forover to his dear Agatha.

I must relate to you some of the beautiful things Elenry's daughtee told me shout hee mother. Agatha had such a refined and benutiful taste and manner that though, from ber parents' poverty, she had not had the benefit of an education, yet it was a common saying of the many who knew her, that she would have ignacel is conat. She never suid or J3d any thing that was not delicate and beantifal. Her dress, even when they were very poor, had never a hole nor a spot. She never allownd any rude or vulgar thing to be said in her presence without expressing her displensure. She was one of nature's nobility. She lived and moved in beanty as well as in gooduess.

When she found she was dying, she asked her husband to leave the room, and then askod a friend who was with her to pray silently, for she would not distress her husband; and so she passed away without a groan, calmly and sweetly, before he retarned. An immense procession of the prople followed her to the grave. to express their admiration of her character and their sorrow for her carly death. There were in Hamburg, at that time, two large churchies, afterwards burned down at the great fire, which had chimes of bells in their towers. These bells played their solemn tones only when some person lamented by the whole city died. These bells were rung at the funemal of Agathn.

Henry, ever after his noparation from her, would go, at the anniversary of ber birth and death, and take all his childron and grandchildren with him to her grave. They earried wreaths and bouquets of flowers, and hid them thore; and he would sit down with them and relato somo anealote about their mothes.

It is a custom with the people of Germany to strew flowers on the graves of their friende. The burying ground was not far from the street, rand often unfixeling boys would steal these sherod flowers: but not ono was ever stolen from the grave of Agathas

42 THE PEDHEE or DCST NTICES.

The sister of whom we lave before apoken, whom we will call also by her Christian nume, Cutharine, loved her sister with the most devoted love, and when Agatha was dying, promised her that she would be a mother to her childeets, and nover leave thert till they were able to take care of theunselves.

She bept her word. She refused many ofiers of marriage, which she might have been disposed to accept, and wais a true mother to her sister's children, till they were all either married or old enough not to want her care Thatu, at the sige of fitty, wat Catharitue twatried a widower, who had three children, who wanted her care

Froms the time Henry lost his dear wife, he devoted himself not only more than ever to his children, but also to the good of his workmenHe sought in duty, in good works, for strength to bear his heavy sorrow; so that death might not divide him from her he loved, but that he might be fitting himself for an eternal union with her in heaven.

Henry never forgot that he had been obliged to work hard for a living himself, and he also remembered what had been his greatest trinls in his days of poverty. He determined to save his workmen from these sufferings ns much as possibles

He recollected and still folt the evils of a want of education. He could never forget how with longing eyes he had used to look at books, and what a joy it had been to him to go to school: and he resolved that his children should be well instructed. The garden of knowledge, that was so tempting to hina, and that he was not allawed to enter, he resolved ahould be open to them. He gave them the best instructors he could find, and toak care that they should be taught every thing that wonld be useful to them - the modern langanged, music, drawing, history, &k.

44 Tnะ vewan oy Des sucha

Hemy had fousd the blessing of being ablo to labor skilfully with his hands: so he insisted that all his childnen should learn how to work with their own hmols.
"My daughters," he said, "in order to be good hotsewives, must know how every thing ought to be done, and be able to do it. If they are poor, this will save them from much misery, and secure them comfort and respectability."

He insisted that those of his sons who engaged in his business should work with the workmen, wear the same dress, and do just as they did; so that the boys might be indopendent of circumstances, and have the security of a good living, come what would. Thus every one of his children had the advantages which belong to poverty as well as those of riches. Their father satd to them, that if they knew what work was, they would know what to require of those who labored for them; that they woald have more feching for hoborers, and more respect for them.

Henry was truly the friend of his workmen.

He gave them time enough to fo to school. He encoumged temperance; he had a weak kind of beer, made of herbes, for them to drink, so that they might not desire spirit. He gave then, once a year, a luandsome dinner, at which he prosided bimself. He encomragod them to read, and helped them to obtain books. He had a singing master, and took eare that every one who had a voite shoold be taught to sing. He bought a pianoforte for them, and had it prut in a room in the fice sory, whero any one, who had time, and wished to play, could go and play upon it; and he gave them a music teacher.

He did every thing he could to make thers 1ife beautiful and happy, He induced them to save a small sum every week from their wages, is a fand to be used when any one died, or was. sick, or was married, or wanted partiealar aid beyond what his wages afforded. Henry's fisctory was the abode of inlustry, temperance, and cheerfnlness. The workmen all loved him like it brother. It was his great object to show them that labor was an honorable thing, and to make laborers is happy as he thought they ought to be.

Fenry was much interested in all that related to the United States of America; and he was very angry nt our slavery. He felt that slavery brought labor into discredit, and his heart ached for the poor slaves, who are eut off from all know ledge, all improvemont. Nothing excited in him such a deep indignation, nothing awnked such abhorrence in his heart, as the thoughs of a sustis receiviag the services of mother without making adequate compensation; or the idea of any man's exercisiug tyransy over kis brother mun.

Henry's workmen were the happiest and best in Hamburg. They loved their employer with their whole hearts; there was nothing they would not do for him. When his factory had been established twenty-five years, the workmen determined to have a jubilee on the occasion, and to hold it on his birthday. They kept their intention a secret from him till the day urrived; but they were obliged to tell his chilures, who, they knew, would wish to make arrangoments for receiving them in such a way as their father would approve of, if he knew of it.

It was summer time; and on Henry's birthday, at reven o'clock in the morning, (for they knew their friend was an early riser,) a strain of grand and beautiful music broke the stillness of the entry hour, and a long procession of five hundred men was seen to wind around the house.

The musicians, playing upon their fine wind instruments, and dressed very gayly, came first. Then came those of his workmen who had beet with him twenty-five years; then his clerks and book-koxpers; then followed his other workmen, and then all the boys who were employed in his factory. All wore black coats, with a gree bow pinned on the breast.

They drew up in a circle on the lawn before his house; and five old men, who had been with him for twenty-five years, stood in the centre, holding something which was wrapped up in the Hamburg flag. Now all the musical instrument played a solemn, religious hymn. Immediately after, the five hundred voices joined in singing it. Never did a truer music riso to heaven than this: it was the music of grateful, lappy hearts.

50 TIIE PEDLEE OF DUST STICES

When the hymn was sung, the book-keeper came forwand and made an nddress to his makter, in the name of them all. In this nddress they fold Henry how happy he had made them; how much good he had done them; how sensible they were of his kindness to them, and how full of gratitude their hearts were towards him. They expressed the hope that they should live with him all their lives.

Now the old men advancod, and uncovered what they bore in their hands. It was a fine portrait of their benefactor, in a splendid frame. The picture was surrounded on the margin by fine drawings, arranged in a tasteful manner, of all the various articles which were made in his factory, views of his warehouses in Hamburgs of the factory in which they worked, of his house in sown, of the one in the conntry where they ther were, sud of the old exchanges, where be used to stand when be sold canes and dust sticks. Then tho old men presented ta kita the prictuse, saying ouly a fow words of respectfol iffection.

52 THE PEDLER OF PUST STGCKS.

The good inan shod tears. He conld not speab at first At last be said, that this was the first time in his lifo that he regretted that he could not rpenk in public; that if he had verer slons any thing for them, 13st day mass thim repaid him for all. They then gave him three checrs. They now sang a German nillfionn trone, to wonha which had been wriften for the occasions.

The children, who, as I told you, knew what was to happen, had prepared a brenkfint for these five hundred of their father's friewde.

All the tables were sproad in the garden behind the house, and Henry desired that all the stom rooms should be opened, and that nothing should be spared.

After an excellent breakfugt, at which the children of the good man waited, the procearion marched around to the fine music; and the workmen, having exjoyod themselver all the morming to their hearts' content, went to partake of a dimer which the family had provided for them in a largo firm house. Here they sang, antl laughed, and told stories till aboat eight o'clock in the evening, when they returned by suilway to Humburg, in a special train which the riilroad directors ordered, free of expense, ont of respect for Herry. The railroad was behind Hemry's house, and as the workmen passed, they waved their hats and clocered him and the fumily till they were ont of lecaring.

34 THE PEDIFE OF DUST ETICKS.

The pieture I hul no much ndmired was a copy of this very pieturi which the workmen had presented. The origimil was hung up in Heury's drawing room. nis his most valuable possession. No wonder His danghter felt proud of that pieture, man loved io show her copy of it to hor friends. Nour it hung a likernss of his denr Agrathe. She was very beautiful. It was a pleasunt thing to hear the daughter talk of ler father and mother.

Thusdid Henry live a useful, honorable, and happy lifi - the natural result of his industry, pernevernnce, uprightnens, and true berievolenoe. Like Ben Adhem, he had shown his love to God by his love to man.

One of Heary's sons had come to this country, to set up a cane und whalebone factory in New York. The father had nided him as far as he thought best, but urged him to depend as far as possible upon his own industry and ability.
This son followed his father's example, and was very successful; but was obliged, on account of the bad effects of our climate upon his health, to return to his native land. The fither, who was anxious to visit the Unitod States, and wished much to soe his daughter again, who was particularly dear to him, determinod to come, for a while, in his son's plice. Henry thought also that his health, which began to fail, might be kenefited by a sea voyage.

One reason why he wished much to visit America was, that he might see, with his own eyes, the position of the laboring classes in THIE PIDLER OF DUST BTICK.
the Free States. Of the Slave States he nover could think with patience. His daughter told me that the only time when she had seen her father lose his elf-command, was when a gentleman, just relurned from the West Indies, had defended Navery, and had said that the negroes were only fit to be slaver. Henry's anger was irrepressible, and, although it was at. his own table, and he was remarksuble for his hospitality and politoness, ho could not help showing his indiguation.

Nothing could excoed his delight it what he saw in this part of our country. The appearance every where of prosperity and comfort; the choerfoll look of our swechanics and laborers; their activity; the freedom and joyousness of their manners - all spoke to him of a froe, neospecous, and hapuy people.

He was only, for any long time, in New York, whero his son's factory was, and in Massachusetts, where his danghter lived. Unhappily his health did not improve. On the contrary, it failed almost daily. Still he enjoyed himself much. While in this part of the country, he took many drives around the environs of Boston with his daughter, and expressed the groutest delight at the aspect of the country, particularly at the appearance of the houses of the farmers and mechanics.

He found, when in the city of New York, that attention to business was too much for his strength; so he resolved to travel. ${ }^{4} \mathrm{Na}$ ture," he said, "will cure me; I will go to Niagara."

He brought with him, as a companion and nurse, his youngest son, a lad of fifteen years of age. The boy went every where with him. When they arrived at Niagara, Heary would not go to the Falls with any other visitors: he only allowed his non to accompany him. When he first saw this glorious wonder of our westera world, he fell on his knees and wept; he could not contain his emotion. He was a true worshigper of Nature, and he courtod her healing influences; but he only found still greater peace and health of mind; his bodily liealthe did not returt.

68

His daughtec, who, like all Germans, held a fisatival every Christmns, wrote to urge him to pass his Christmas with her at her Massthchusetts home; be was then in New York. He replied that he was too ill to bear the journey at that season. The pleasure of the thought of her Christmas eveaing was gone:
but she determined to make it as pleasant as she conld to her husband and children, though her thoughts and her heart were with her sick fiatbers.

In the morning, however, i telegraphic mes sage arrived from ber father, saying he would be with them at eight o'clock in the evening.

With the Germans, the whole fimily make presents to each other, no matter how trifling : but sotne little present every one reccives. Henry's little granddaughter was dressed in a style as fairy-like as possible, and presented her grandfather with a basket of such fruits as the season would allow of, as the most appropriate present for a lover of Nature. A very happy evening the good man had with his children.

He was forced to return to New York. It *was not many months after that his daughter 60 tife penier of dest micki.

heand that be was very it af Oyster Bay, where be had gone to a water cure establishwent. She west immediately to hits, and retmained with him, nursing him, and realing to him, till he was better, though not well.

Duting this perion, whess lie wis able to bear the fatigue, bis daughter drove him in a gig round the neighboring country; and she told me that sucls was his interest in the laboress, that - he woald never pass one without stopping, and asking him questions about his mode of working, Ee. He could nat speak. English; but whe was the intergmeter.

At last he insisted upon his duughter's teturning to her fastily, Thore was something so solemn, so repressed, in his manner, when he took loave of her, that abe was afterwards convineed that he knew he should never see.

Ler agnin; but he snid not a word of the kind.

His health grew worse; his strength friled daily; and he determined to return to Germany, so as to die in his native land. He wrote to his daughter, to ank her, as a proof of her love for him, not to come to say firewell. She was ill at the time, and submitted with a sud and aching heart.

She had seen her dear, excellent father for the last tine. He lived to arrive in Hamburg. His workmen, when they heand of his arrival, went to the vessel, and bore him in their arms to hin country house, where he died eight days afterwards.

He showed his strong and deep love of mature in these his last thours; for when he was so weak as to be apparently unconscious of the presence of those he loved, he begged to be carried into his garden, that he might hear the birds sing, and look upon his flowers once more.

62 THE pEDLER OF DEST EHCES.

When he knew he was breathing his last, he said to his children who were staviding around his bed, "Be useful, and love one another."

His death was considered a public calamity in Hamburg. His workmen felt that they had lost their benefactor and brother. His children knew that life could never give them another such friend.

His body was placed in the great hall, in his country house, and surrounded by onauge trees in ftill bloom. Flowers he loved to the very last; and flowers shed their perfume over the mortal garment of his great and boantifut soul. One after myother, his workmen and his other friends came and looked at his sweet and noble countenance, and took a last farewell.

In Germany, when a distinguished man dies, he is carried to the grave on an elevated hearse decorated with black feathers and all the trappings of woe; but Henry's workmen insisted upon carrying their benefuctor and friead to his last home in their arms. Their sorrowing hearts were the truest mourning, the only pomp and circumstance worthy of the occasion: and their streaming oyes were the modest and unobtrusive, but most deeply affecting, pageant of that day. All the inhabitants followed him, with mourning in their hearts. Remembering Henry's love for flowers, his follow-citizens made arches of flowers io three places for his mortal remains to pass under, as the most appropriate testimonial of their loves. The public officers all followed bim to the grave, and the military praid him appropriate honons. Three different addresses were delivered over his body by distipguished speakers, and then hundreds and hundreds of voices joined in singing a hymn to his praise written by a friend.

Henry mado such an arringement of his business, and left such dircetions about it, as to make sure that hia workmen should, if they wished it, have employment in his factory for ten gears to come. He divided his property equally amorigot his children, and bequenthed to them will hin charities, which were not few, saying that he knew that his children would do as he foud dove, and that these daties would be sacred with them.

Such a life needs no comment. Its eloquence, ita immortal power, is its truth, its reality:

Among the many beautiful things that were written in honor of Henry, I have translated these as peculiarly simple and just.
"ON THE GRAVE OF THE GOOD, GREAT MAN."
"Thenry ——, a man in the best sense of the term, strong in body and soul, with a heart fall of the noblest purposes, which he carried out into action, without show and with a childlike mind.
"To the great Giver of all things thankful for the smallest gift. T'a his family a devoted father. To his friends a faithful friend. To 5 the state a useful citizen. To the poor a benefactor 'To the dying a worthy exatuple.
"Why was this power broken in the prime of life? Why were the wings of this Alifgent ngiirit cligped? Why were atopged the beatings of this heart, which beat for all created things? Sad questions, which can only find an answer in the assurance that all which God witls for us is good.
"Peace be with thee, friend and brother! We can never forget thee."

Around their fatherts grave the chililren stand, Apd mearning friends are shediling bitter teary; With sextwitug fases peen are soantiong lowse, Whow fender love whll teas him in fheir arms In sickucs eaes, and pour onep mone in slasth, Etia wha peatechas, telicod, well beljer suls.

And muay epes whoe tears be wiped away, Are verping it his wispors lavere fordry.
 Are hidilen in the fomb what then reanips to renn? The mernoty of har flcebl is pars
O earrol deukh, then, like the flowers of ytring
May good denis ane brought to Dight filessel and fill of lover, hood olriditeal Ant irue fifende stand at his grave, And there with truth loudly declars, *A soblo aodl has grone to heavens Ririt good has borge emlettis! fruit a His whole slay's merk now in Good is done" Thas pieak we now over lhy grave, Oar fríenl, mow thorifled and living lo our, liearts, A lanting monument thoo thypets hat hails in evely heart wheh thy grmat worth has lonown.

Jex, mome than marble or than trass, our love Slall bitor thes, who decllest ta our hearts

These teans, which pare lote evopecraies to theo, 'Tline nolde sman, whon Goal has eallel away Eeose worls which. Hit bituvelf Lax bicisolThene gnatufal teen shall fall upoo ther tumb

O, lat wie noter forget the fram and earnest mind Whieh hare Lim ewilly oavanl in his coareot How from as slanler taig he batle a luridge Orer whilh he zafoly liwiepel to the work Whath youthfil hoje and courage planncil, Think how the circle of his love enheraced His ebililen and hit childera's children, all, ITis blaghent joy their haprinese and groms.

TWist have lin fatiosel kot the goet of all, Sapporser, banofnitor, falufal friens!
How with hls wiat and powrerfill minal He servol unt blerout his satire place! Ilis norks ronain to spesk his graine.

How did his geacrous, noble opirit glow Wib jog at all the gool mad beatatifal Which tiam and human skill terooght forth!
He ever did the stauland gladly enita Which Ighat, and truth, and juntice ruisel? And when his boble efforts seemed to fail, Found ever in his pare und quies livaat a sweet repoes.

We give to-lay thy dust to duat.
 Thou ant bot deals thoo art already riten. Lavel frimel, thas livest, and thou watcbent ofor us still.
He dry our feaers bo hauhed our sighn:
Vinsar ober death, our friend sill lives;
Thkest bin rewapd from the Great Mater's land
Deep niglt hat pased axay. On Mim
Eternal moming breaks. Ite,
Yoou the dark clamber of the grave,
Gocs to the light of the All-bily Ose.

Tieag, weep so mom? Lode ty with hope on bigh? Thene doea be drell. Ite liveh too as earth The Master who liar callal him Drece to Higber work, Tumatrow will eall of - jecringe to-dy. Then ilall we sev hira degos agale. Hes who weat totao Frome earla la weakeses natit ia puhn, Is risea there in everianing joy and sfruagh Tilt then we liere ruelve to Iive like Him, That whe, like hish, nay dit religlona, trues, gad fres

When any little boy reads this true story of a good, great mam, I would hsve him remember that Herry began to be a good, groat man when only eight years old. Heary began by being industrious, patient, and good humoved, so that people tiked to buy his sticics. Thea he was faithful and true to his father, and would not leave him, not even for the sake of gnining some ndrantages. Beary nad thll his ficulties, and, by making his protty eanes, he got money, not to buy sugar plums, but to pay for instruction. When he did wrong, he took his punishment checrfully, and dia not commit the same fanlt again. All the virtues which finully made him a good, great man he began to practise when fo was only eight years of age, whes he was really a little boy.

I would have every little boy and girl who reals this story try to imitate him. If he is poor, let him learn to do something useful, so to earn money that may help his father and mother, and perhaps be the means of giving him a better education. If he is rich, let him seek to got knowledge, and let him remember those who have not as much as be has, like little Eva, who tanght Uncle Tom. Let him remember that the selfish and the lazy cannot be truly happy; that selfishness is its own punishment in the end; that no childrea and no men are truly happy or truly good who do not obey the words of the noble-minded Henry on his death-bed -
"Be useful, and love one another."

THB MIGHTY DEEDS

 or

A LEFTER TO A LITTLE DOY FHOM HIS AUST.

My dear Frask: I was much pleased with your writing me a lettor. If jots were to take a picee of paper, and do up some sugar plums in it, and rethd it to mee, I should eat up the sugar plams, and then there would be nothing left but tho picee of white paper; but if you take a piece of paper, and mark on it with a pen some crooked and some struight, some round and some long strokes, they tell me, (a) though they make no nose, that you love me, and they soem just like little messengers from you to me, all with something to tell me of my dear litulo Frank

Besides, after these messengens have spoken onoe, there they stand ready to opeak again as soon as I only look at them, and tell me the same pleasant stary the second time that they did the fins.

If I wore to put them away in a safe place for forty years, nud then look at them, when you were beginning to be an old man, these crooked scratches of your pen would still talk to me of little Frank, as he was when I held him in my lap, and we used to Isugh, and talk, and tell storios together.

Think, then, my dear Frank, how mucls better it is to be able to fill a letter with these curions strokes to send to a friend than to have bushels of sugar plums to send him. Did your ever think what curious thiugs these little letters are? You know the great Bible that you love to look at so much, and to hear father read from. All the wonderful things related in it are told by twenty-six lítle letters.

It is they that tell you of the creation of the world, of the beautiful garden called Eden in which Adam and Eve lived; they tell you the sad story of their disobedience to God, and of their being turned ont of paradise.

Then they tell you all about the Israclites, or Jews, as wo call them. In the samo book, these twenty-six letters place themselves a little differently, and tell you the story of Joseph and his brothren that you wero so much plensed with when your father real it to you, and that of Dasid and Galiath, that you like so much.

Then these same wonderful story tellen relave to yos the beastitul bistary of Datiel: of tint courngcous, good man who chose rather to be tom to pieces by wild beasts than not to pray every doy to God, and thank Hirs for His goodness: and how God preserved him in the fion's den.

The wonderfil story of Finith they naso tell you, and many others

But last and most inferesting and wonderful of nll, my dear littie Frank, is the story of Jesus Christ and his friends called the apostles.

Thene little letters have nover told such a beautiful and affecting story as thoy tell you of that pure and upotless Being who was sent by Giod to teach us our duty, and to show us the way to be happy forever.

No being ever existed on this earth who showed so much love and tenderness, so much goodness and humility, so much wisdom and power as did Jesus Christ.

There, in that best of books, stand these littlo messengers, as I call them, still speaking the very words of the blessed Saviour: ready to comfort the poor and sorrowful ; to teach patience and hope to the sick; to instruct the ignorant ; to reprove the wicked ; and inviting little children to come to his arms and reccive his blessing.
$\mathrm{D}_{0}$ you not want to know all that they can tell jou of this great and good Being?

I could write you, my dear Frank, a letter so long that I fear you would be tired of reading it, about these same wonderful little figures: but now I dare say that you will think more of them yourself, and that the little book with the comers rolled up which containa your A B C will be more respectable in your sight.

Perhaps you will, after thinking some time, ask who invented these wonderfal letters; and then, if you do really want to know, your father will tell you all that in known about it, or, at least, all that you can remember and understand. When you are old enough to read about the history of letters, you will find books which will make you laugh by telling you that there was a time when, if you wanted to write "a man," you would have been obliged to draw the pieture of a man; and, as there was then no paper like ours, you would have been obliged to take a piece of wood or bark to make the drawing on; and so the same with every thing else.

So you see, if you and I had lived at that time, and you had written to me about your dog, your pleasant ride and the other things that were in your letter, you would perhaps have been obliged to get a man to bring me the letter, it would havo been so clumsy, instead of bringing it yourself, folded neatly in your nice little pocket book; and ns for my letter, only think how much room it would have taken up.

You will say, "Why, aunt, letters are not only better than sugar plums, they are better than dollars."

Indeed they are, my dear Frank. The knowledge that they can give, the blessing they can bestow, is better and more valuable than all the silver and gold in the whole world; for they can teach us what is wisdom and happiness; they can teach us the will of God.

I lowe to think, too, of what pleasant messages they can carry backwards and forwards between friends, and that in a fow hours these curious, handy little things will appear before you, my dear littlo Frank, and tell you what I have just been thinking about, and that I always love you, and am ever

Your affectionate
Acsm.

WHAT DAY IS IT?

Ir is so still that, although it is middny, one can hear the sound of the soft spring shower as it falls on the young and tender leaves.

The crowing of the cock pierces the ear with his shrill note, as in the silent watches of the night. The song of the wren is so undisturbed, it is so full, and is heard so distincelly that it only reminds one, with fts sweet music, how unusual is the silence; it does indeed seem but the "echo of tranquillity."

$$
6
$$

There are many people in the stroets, but they have a dififerent appearanee from usual ; they are all dressed in their holiday garments : they look happy, but they are very calm and serious. The gentle shower does not soem to disturb them; it only affords an opportunity for recigrocal kindness.

I see a venerable-looling old lady who from infirmity is obliged to walk very alowly. She is supported by a bright, rosy-cheeked girl who holds up the umbrella, and keeps beck her light and joyoas step to the slow time of her aged compurion.

An elegrathlooking woman is leading, with great case mad tendernets, a Jithlo gial throngh the mond. The lady puts her umbrella so low that the min is leept from the child, but it falls upon her owa gay elothes. The little girl muit be that lady's daughter. But sae ! they stop at the door of yonder miserable-Jooking house. The lady cannot. live there, surely. She gives the child a little book. The little girl enters alone. I see her now in the houss Shy is the daughter of the poor, sick woman who lives there

There is a trembling old man tottering along: he looks a little Dike Tinsy David, as the boys call him; but he has on a clean and respectable suit of black, and a weed on his hat; he is quite sober, but it is David; and one of the tery bogy that lane laughed at and nbused hin when intoxicated, now respectfully offers him an umbrells.

A fashionable young man is gallanting a laty with the greatent care and most delicate respect ; she tnust be his sister, or the lady he is engaged to murry, he is so careful to shelter her from every drop of rain. No, I see her enter her door; it is my good veighbor, Miss - ; she is otve of the excellent of the carth, but she is poor, old and foriaken by all but the fetw who seek for those whom others forget. She has no beauty, no celebrity; there is no eclat in noticing her: there are those who will even laugh at him for his attention to her.

Stranger than all, these are two men, violent opponents in religion and politics, walking arm in arm with each other. The Calvinist extends to him whom le considers his erring brother a kinduess as if to a dear friend: for the Univenalist is sick, suld the Calvinist tries to protect him from the shower while exposing himself; sec, he takes off his own cloak and pats it on hizu.

What does all this mean? Whence is this holy stillness ? What day is it ?

It is the Lord's day! All these people are returning from the house of prayer. It is this thought that makes the laughing girl restrain her gayety, and teach her steps to keep time with her infirm old friend.

The sinful old man abstains from his vicious habit out of reverence for this holy day; he has lost his son too; and sorrow and the weight of an evil conscience have driven him to the mercy sent; and thoy who despised his drunkenness respect his misery.

The lady who lod the little child so tenderly to its poor mother's door is a teacher in the Sanday school; the book she gave telle of the wisdom and goodness of God; she has awakened in her little pupil's soul that principle which shall never die, and taught lier to be a messenger of pesco and joy to her poor, sick mother.

It is the iuflnence of this bleseed day that makes the usually frivolous and thoughtless prefir a work of charity to the gratification of vauity.
It is the Sabbath day, with its calm and clevated duties and holy repose, that subdues animosity, lays the restless spirit of vanity, eliecks habitual viee, and awakrns all the charities and sweet courtesies of life.
This is the true rest of the Sabbath; the rest from vanity, from contention, from sin. This is the true preacling, the practice of Christian duties, the performance of works of love, the exercise of the holiest affections of our nature. This is the stwe service of God; doing good to

His human family. This is the true knowledge of Him, "that we love one another."

Doubtless the instructions from the pulpit do, in many instances, enlighten the ignorant, quicken the languid and the cold-hearted, and alarm or persuade the sinful and the erring; and, on this account alone, the day is a great good, and should be welcomed. However, were any one doubtful of the blessing that attends it, I would not reason with him, but I would, if it were possible, lead him, when he knew not what day it was, where he could witness, as I have, such a scene ns I have just described: and when he exclaimed, "What does it all mean ? What day is it ?" I would simply answer, "It is the Sabbath day."

THE CHILD AT HER MOTHER'S GRAVE.   Is that litulo noom of thine  Swelt sleep has come to theeAh, tasther 1 dearrat mether mina ! $\mathrm{O}_{\text {, call }}$ me to that roote of thines O, siat it not from note.

> I would so glaily be with thee, And be thy chilh agnia.

Tis cold and starmy hese with me.
TIs wurm, and $O$, so stll with thec. $D$, lek ma, let tae ins.

Thow toak'it wo gloilly onco with thes, So gladly bell'st my land!
O, soel thoa linat fornaken me-
Taks melt this vime, wgin with thee Into the beavenly land.

EVENING PRAYER.

> Thot, from whom we never part; Thou, whone love is every where;
> Thou, who seet every heart, Listen to oar avening jrayor.

Father, fill our soals with love: Love unfailings, full, and free:
Love bo injury ena move; Love that ever rests on thee.

Heavenly Father, throagh the night Keep us safe from every ill.
Checrfal as the mocring light, May we waike to do thy will.

THE SABBATH IS HERE.

TuE Sabhath is liees. It is sent we from Heaves. Itest, rest, toilsome life.
Be silent all strits
Let uis stop on colr way,
And elve thanks, and pray
To Hins who all thing han given.

The Sabbath is lieres. To the bells let us gor
How frenh and how fuir,
In the ntill moriung tar,
The bright goldea grain
Waves over the pulala!
It is God who doth all this besfow.

The Sabbeth is berrs. On this bleseod morn, No tirel ox moans, No croaking whenl groans At roat is the plought. No noion is lieard now, Save the sound of the ruating coms.

The Sahbath is heres Our seed we have sownt, In hope shol in faith
The Father Ife saith
Amen! bo it rot
Behold then corn grow!
Rejoicing his goodness wetI own.

The Sabbeth is lierc. His love we will sing, Who rendeth the raia Upoa the young grala.

Full soon all around  The skale will soand,  And home the bright sheaves we will bring

The Sabbath is bere. In lope und is love, We sow in the dat, Whilo humbly we trus, Up gonder, shall grow The sood shlch we now, And bloon a briglt garland above.

TO A BUITERFLY.

[rixi numumix rax urneth.]
Aury, lovely, hearenly thing!
Butterfly with quivering wing!
Hovering in thy tramient hour,
Over every bush and flower,
Feaiting upon flowers and dow, Thyself a brilliant bloseom too

> Who, with roy fligers line, Purpled o'er those wingre of thine?
> Wra it some sylph whose tender caro
> Spangled thy robes so fine and fair,
> And wove them of the morning air?
> I foel thy litule throbling hinart.
> Thou fear'st, e'en bow, daath's bitter smart.

Fly liule spirit, fly nway !
He free aad jogfal, thy short day ! Temage, thon doat seem to me, Of that whirh I may, one day, be, Whee I shall drop this nobe of earth, And wake into a vpirits birth.
BOORS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE,
peatianam ar
WRITTEMORE, NHEES, & WALK.
Fo, 114 Wanhiagtion Itreet.
15ne, Clies giat. Prife kis Cinte.
SSINE-CMNAd; OH, THE THRER PATHS
a stany rut pors
By Jetia. Kafavanas, authy of "Nathala," Wish leoutiful Hilustratingh
Thano. clets gas. Prios 6
THE H1 He mmose
A BTAKY OF THE LAIT CENTMAE.
Dy Avxa Hamaise Derner, anther of " Frietabe and Fortuzes"

LTTEP PALT AN7 ORTPR stopiss
for noms sim ctita.

TALPS OF BHIPWHEXES AND DEASTERS AT SEA. Dy Tuosis Mrietay. Illuatribal.

THE EVERGLEES CHLILLIT.
A Collestien of Thles far Childrwi. Hy Avore W. Annort. What Fuarboun Iflubations.

STOHES 50 JElCR $3 \pi$ TO TWNK.  A Salan of Jayenilis Tales Dy T. D. 1. Stroxs. With Tirties Iliurtations

THE CABINET OP GEXS

Or Two Ifundred and FiAcea Starlar nad AnseJotes for Young 19ople.

THE LIVES OF CELFBLATED CHILDHEN,

A keuntina ia leteteating illitorial Braik

THHTK YFADS FHOW HOME;

OH, A VOFCE VROM THE MALS DEOK
Delag tha Hippripece of Sames Lionh, in the Mritich und Amerlo can Naviec, ther Menchant Serviov, dan, with Illuatratiens

