Merchandise, Venetian Stage Problems Present Solution

By THOMAS L. MILLER

Tests on large mirror held up by rings, which is part of the set, indicate that the mirror may not remain in place during the performance. The mirror is part of a special effect that is used in the show and is held up by rings. The rings are designed to give the mirror a floating effect.

In the show, the mirror is used in a scene where the audience is transported to a world of fantasy. The mirror is raised and lowered, and the audience is struck by the visual effect created by the floating mirror.

The problem with the mirror is that it is too heavy, and the rings are not strong enough to hold it in place. The solution is to use a special type of ring that is stronger and can support the weight of the mirror.

The new type of ring will be installed in time for the next performance, and the show will continue without interruption.
