At's Fare

After four months of conflict, the Big Ten, which met recently at Bloomington, Indiana, decided not to order Maryland, Michigan, Ohio State, and Wisconsin to give up football immediately. Michigan State was granted a chance to appeal the decision in court, and the case was scheduled for a hearing on December 14. The appeal will test the validity of the Big Ten's 1936 resolution that it would not compete against any team which had played another conference. In this case, Michigan State was swamped by the Big Ten in 1936. The resolution, however, has not been enforced since then, and Michigan State is not a member of any conference.:

Do you remember way back in grammar school when you stood up before the gathered assembly of proud fathers and mothers to recite your verse for the annual Thanksgiving day program? Probably, most of you remember even if your world-wide exploitation won't permit you to recite the fact. And you probably remember the trip that followed the program even if it was only a few polite miles in the old four-wheeled vehicle.

And even if you don't admit remembering, it's likely that some of your friends have not forgot the celebration of those family foods that formed the big part of the day. And then after the meal was over the mighty grumbling would initiate his monologue and tell the club a story. A story that had been beginning in the days of the Pilgrim fathers when Thanksgiving meant something more than a turkey dinner off of a table stacked up on the side yard door at the local dairying farm.

It's a long way from the days when the word Thanksgiving meant a real return of thanks for the comforts of food and home, Thanksgiving for food enough to eat and for a place to sleep.

If a long time from those days to those when we have no need for an annual meal, it must be to be thankful. So while you're stuffing yourself with dressings and pumpkins, remember that we have a Hughet for the real significance of the day. It don't hurt you.

Council May Write History

The student council will gather tonight for what may prove to be the most important and influential meeting in its history.

The council has been faced with the task of developing a student government system for Michigan State college and its campus organizations, a system which they hope to present to the university for adoption in the near future.

For the student council members these have been formulated in their individual minds the problems to be overcome before a truly representative student government can become a reality. Though these men have been faced with this problem they will find it easier to find a solution to this problem than those in the past might ever need to agonize over a problem of this magnitude because of the change in student government.

In past years the student council has contended itself with holding campus dances and sponsoring programs, usually of temperance affiliation, which were planned for the entertainment of all those interested in these activities. The work was performed in a rather casual manner, but one could not say that the meetings of the student council were held to plan some sort of social movement.

Perhaps the need for a student council became apparent when it was realized that the student government was not acting in the proper manner. In an era when every college student is more and more inclined to be interested in some movement, it is felt that such a body should be established.

College students who have been in the realization that their four years in college are really periods of preparation for life after graduation, are more interested in the effects of their college days on their future lives. The national social movements of the world have made it apparent that the college student is no longer a type figure in international life.

Speaking of the trend in student thought, one may ask oneself the question that the right-thinking student will ask himself: What is the student's role in the world picture? With the increasing realization that college students have a part to play in the development of national and international thought, it is seen that the college student must play his part in the development of the future world picture.

The Editor Goes on Trial

TRIAL of the Michigan State University bell ringers, who have been accused of publishing a radical newspaper under the name of "North Phalanx," opened today before the Michigan State police court.

The trial was adjourned until tomorrow morning and the defense would then be expected to make its case. A bell ringer who had been singing a popular ballad in the halls of the old hall of residence has been accused of being a member of the "North Phalanx." The trial is expected to last for several days.
