Scouting parties in the past few weeks have little importance here, the emphasis falling largely on the thumb.

Undaunted by the impending arrival of the famished hordes, the defenders are placing their hopes on a picked army of turkeys, who are expected to stave off the first rush. These shock troops will be reinforced by assorted battalions of chickens, geese, ducks and other lesser fowls.

Help Future Spartans

This editorial is directed chiefly to freshmen. Principals of the high schools which many freshmen attended will visit State today, and will want to meet and talk with their former students.

These men have taken a day off from their work to learn what Michigan State students think, after college experience, of how adequately their high school prepares its students for advanced study.

Freshmen, and upperclassmen, too, can do a service to those yet in high school who some day will become collegians by being frank and constructive in conferences with their principals.

"College life could be easier for many students if they were, while in high school, better prepared for it.
