Dear Johnny:

There are more rumors than raindrops around here lately and that's really something. Everyone seems to be competing to think of a bigger and better future for the college. The latest one is that the students will be held hostage as soon as the campus can be used as a training ground for war dogs and carrier pigeons.

Perhaps that's the influence of the dog show that is scheduled for tomorrow. There are all the state photos, someone is bound to win a prize, done purpose of, of course. The football team has left for Washington, D.C., after part of turning from Temple. Seems like they haven't been in those for weeks. Join the team and see the country.

This week hit a new low in social activities. Even exchange students turned up with things to do. It's hard to believe a college without fun. There are a few students to the show, however, and they're looking for trouble. The bears have been acting up, too. Maybe that's the reason for the exchange students.

The British have reported that at least 78 enemy tanks, 20,000 German and 50 Italian prisoners have been taken in Operation Torch, and that isolated pockets of resistance have been smashed at the ports of Tripoli and Benghazi. The Allied forces are now concentrating on the Axis coastal road at the Axis anchor point near the Qattara Depression. These troops were abandoned by the German African corps recently in Africa. But another reason for their abandonment was effectiveness. All German sources add that much of the worst of the Fascist army has fled to Africa. These U. S. British, and South African armies will be backing constantly at the blitzing Column of Column backed tight in four lines west and south of Mahal. The entire Mediterranean coastal road by which Rommel's troops could escape to Italy has become a "Rubin of fire and death." The Associated Press correspondent Frank L. Martin, said in a dispatch from Fort in the desert that the British force are in well dug in. And another Black Column reported that during the day the British and Axis aerial encounters are becoming more and more intensive.
