Grin and Bear It

BY LIEBMAN

OCTOBER night was the day of the first game of the football season. The band had gathered a few minutes early and was playing a stirring march. The crowd was just beginning to arrive, and the lights were not yet on. Suddenly, a loud explosion was heard, and the crowd fell silent. The band continued to play, but the crowd was now more interested in the explosions.

The game was on, and the excitement was building. The teams were evenly matched, and the crowd was on their feet, cheering for each team. The game was exciting, with brilliant plays and strategic moves. The final whistle blew, and the crowd erupted in cheers. The game was a success, and the players were hailed as heroes.

The next day, the excitement continued. The players were interviewed, and the coaches were asked for their opinions. The game was replayed on television, and the crowd was given a chance to relive the excitement. The next day, the players went back to their normal lives, but the excitement of the game remained.
