Traditions Stay as Campus Changes

AN INSEPARABLE part of college life are campus traditions and, despite the wartime changes and others replacing them, the campus life of Michigan State is as rich in these traditions as it ever was.

Interpreting the entire list of State traditions would prove a long story, but one particularly outstanding in its importance among other campus traditions is the annual convocation of the Red Cedar. Adhered to by all students and also respected by such transients as teaching the many different men, this tradition given each year to renew and increase the beauty of our college grounds.

This tradition is one of the finest around. As the women and the men organized Sunday school, spring Sunday week and its Eastern traditions, music from the casket, Tower Guard, Mortar Board, Big Brother, Big Sister, and other traditions, are all on the Red Cedar.

Preservation of these and the many other traditions of Michigan State is the privilege and should be the aim of each and every State student. Future classes will strive to uphold all of these traditions and when returning classes tomorrow they will remember anew these familiar traditions.

INTERPRETING THE WAR NEWS

A brief look at the situation in the Volcano-Montana area, the most war-ravaged part of the world, will show that this area is the most important. The Volcano-Montana area is the seat of the Pacific command, and the area is the most war-ravaged part of the world.
