Quartz Crystals

Before the war Bell Laboratories' scientists found that quartz crystals could be used to work in such a way that pieces of copper and iron were carried on the same frequency of sound waves at one time.

Now with strategic metals scarce, the Bell Laboratories have manufactured six million crystals of copper and iron at a cost of 96,000. These tiny crystals are helping to provide communication for each pound used.

They are being used on the battle fronts, too. Western Electric has manufactured five million quartz crystals for use in the dependable communications equipment used by the Armed Forces.

In the better days ahead this experience will be used to directed toward keeping this country's telephone system the best in the world.
