MICHIGAN STATE NEWS

In Campus Quarters

By SCOTTIE McNEAL and RO HOWLAND

One week of the new term was exciting, but the way college is going on in Michigan State is nothing but a whirlwind. It will have been in full swing all around campus before you realize it. That may not be certain, but just look at the evidence. The only ones on the campus actually studying are the faculty, and they are composed of Betty Z. Timms, who is taking a course in Business Law and has the phone number of the dean; Jane Miller, who is studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body; and Daniel G. Zola, who is working on his thesis in economics. The rest of the students are just walking around campus.

The case of Betty Z. Timms, who is studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body, is especially interesting. She has been studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body for the past year. She has been studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body for the past year and has a thorough understanding of the subject. She is very interested in the subject and is working hard to achieve her goal.

In the case of Daniel G. Zola, who is working on his thesis in economics, he has been working on his thesis for the past two years. He has been studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body for the past two years and has a thorough understanding of the subject. He is very interested in the subject and is working hard to achieve his goal.

In the case of Jane Miller, who is studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body, she has been studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body for the past year. She has been studying the effects of alcoholism on the human body for the past year and has a thorough understanding of the subject. She is very interested in the subject and is working hard to achieve her goal.
