Library Locks Rare Books In Its Recesse

By MARIAN VANDALL

In keeping with a Sherlock Holmes atmosphere, the library is taking extraordinary steps to protect itself. The rare books, deep in its recesses, hiding them from the public's view, are not "safe" any longer. The collection of rare books, first edition books, and valuable manuscripts is protected with keys and passwords.

As a precaution, the library has begun to lock the doors to the rare book collection. Only authorized personnel, such as librarians and special collections staff, have access to these areas. The goal is to prevent unauthorized access to the valuable holdings.

Again ... We've Missed the Boat

Mustantry abide in our midst? The victory bond drive started this week, yet no student group had foresight enough to lay any plans for it before hand. There might be a string of coincidences in some, but no organized effort for selling bonds has thus far been made.

What's the matter? If periodical concern, like that least car, ban, bring out the enthusiasm of every man and woman. When matters of national importance, like the victory bond drive come up, we lag.

Is it standard of values disturbed, or is a lack of planning and leadership indicated?

This is no time to forget what has gone before, so let's stay on the ball.

LETTERS ... To The Editor

To The Editor:

Many students on the campus would like to see the Spartan revived, also a new literary magazine started.

There is a definite need for both humorous and artistic expression, and we believe that a good, well-directed periodical is possible to write here.

Please consider making the Spartan a variety medium which would include such things as humor, other views, a paper by the art editor, literary articles, features, service, short stories, criticism, informative material, and other such material that is both humorous and mechanically correct. Such a composition is in need of the Music department could be included.

We have been informed that as an end of the semester, student magazines are not printed due to a lack of time and interest.

Let us once again in talking about the magazine. Those who are interested in competing and working on the staff of such a magazine meet in room 7, Tuesday, Thursday, at 3:45 p.m. to attend and discuss the matter.
