Dear Parents, Great Lakes.

The first question I am going to ask soldiers in our army is:
"Are you going to tell the world that the Germans placed the name?"
"No, I don’t think so."
"That must have been a German who did it."
"It is a genuine German."

Both Bluejackets, Spartans Expect to Stress Passing

Holmes Will Show Pictures on Utah

For the second and probability the last time, the State Spartans will face the Great Lakes Bluejackets on the college field today at 2 p.m. in the previous meeting took place in 1942, prior to the outbreak of the year ending.

When State takes to the field, they will be playing with a team that has come up almost as young as the Spartans. Coming in the first four games, and losing only one game since then piled up a string of three victories over Illinois, 12 to 6.

State on the other hand is again in the position to turn one of its recent seasons. Losing their opening game, the Spartans have run up a tally of four victories, and one tie. The tie was with Marquette, a team that Great Lakes defeated 27 to 7 last week.

Foreign students in the United States are an important part of the American education system. This group includes not only international students, but also foreign exchange programs, which allow American students to study abroad and vice versa. This diversity is crucial for fostering understanding and cooperation among different cultures and nations. The presence of foreign students enriches the educational experience for all involved, bringing new perspectives and cultural exchanges to the academic community. The integration of foreign students enhances the global awareness of students and faculty, promoting cultural understanding and respect. In addition, foreign students contribute to the diversity of the campus community, representing a wide range of backgrounds and experiences. Their presence fosters a more inclusive and vibrant learning environment, benefiting everyone involved in the educational process. The integration of foreign students is a testament to the openness and inclusivity of American higher education, embracing the diversity that enriches our society and our world.
Weekly Letter to Men in the Service
November 16, 1945

DARERST Johnny,

Another week rolls around and so I’ll obiliterately hang out my letter to you, Big Boy. Not that I’m lacking, but I believe I’d like to get an answer to these queries. But should you write me back, I will do so. The one which was written in French. Thanks for that, it was one of all over and all in another year and I’ll be one of the best years. The best year is now, and I’ll walk off with the majority decoration print, and will be known as being a lover of the Allied States.

Just have a happy and a happy Christmas and a happy New Year.

The year is about to pass

God grant you a long life.

Sincerely,

Mr. Franklin

Chinese Reds Hold Chiang's Advancement On Manchuria

CHUNGKING, Nov. 9 (AP) - Chinese communists issued a warning today, that unless international troops stationed on Manchuria's southern border, along the boundary of the Red area, American-occupied Chinaward, eventually be evacuated to prevent a possible clash.

The communists said: "All the troops stationed in the Manchuria south of the Yalu River must be withdrawn to the north, or a clash between Soviet and Manchurian troops may result in a conflict.

The three sides, they charged, must return to the terms of agreement on May 24, 1945, or risk the possibility of conflict.

The communists also stated that they will not make more demands when it comes to the question of food and security for the communists in Manchuria.

Former State English Instructor Tells GI Viewpoints

This letter was received from Warren L. Finchmacher, now teaching at Butler University in Kenosha at the Victory College. He was an English Instructor at State from 1944 to 1945. Mr. Finchmacher went on to write:

"It was in the spring of 1944 that depressing first was from overseas. Three of my classmates and I wrote our letters to the Daily Star in East Lansing and discussed the problems of a college student of the postwar years, which, it then appeared, would prove no harder than 1940.

Dr. C. L. Stevenson, the foreign language department head at the time, was the one who volunteered the names of his classes of which totals of his classes of the same War World War II. But the question which most interested us was, how certain, on our return war that we would face this new in our last year of college and God know how many years ahead!"

Wondered at Results

"Partly from a professional viewpoint, as college professors and instructors, we would like to have the reaction to a college text on grammar, for example, of men who have been under emergency fire and whose minds have been conditioned to this stimulus-response kind of oblective with deo to the hearts of the 'war time' hate and so necessary for the preservation of the priceless number of lives under the stress of combat. I content I had no misgivings.

These qualities and accomplishments were not eliminated by the kind of public education I had seen; my very appearance as an instructor here at the Bobbs' dominated by universal ... the usual officer-like military Boot camp training in the Grand Isle Plage, a house among the soldiers, and the dance bands.

In the six weeks I have been here, however, have been thoroughly impressed and the conclusion that this training is of utmost importance, that this training is of utmost importance.

In the six weeks I have been here, have been thoroughly impressed and the conclusion that this training is of utmost importance.

Speaks of Experiences

"The classes are small but representative, and there are feelings from all ranks and graces in the army — all branches. There is a sense of a force captain in my literature class is of studying English A.D.A. comprehensive examinations, Columbia university in the definitive Negro composition class, an advanced graduate in English and part of what will be his first year of college education.

All of these solider-students have common in the one quality of students ... intellectual curiosity.

Use What They Have

Our philosophy classes here have on text books but I assured that the GI Chloe can read in French, Latin or English. Lacking the use of a large college library, my lectures have been entirely written on the texts and the results have been pleasing and satisfying.

"It is difficult to answer this very great American curricular curiosity unless it be that even in a soldier's tongue draws the taste of fresh milk after a long of the postwar substance that goes under the label of milk in the series, as one has not read three or four years for the knowledge and conviction by field manual, military experience or the attitudes of superior officers.

More Naive สave

One of the characteristics of the soldier-student, as evident at the time, is the lack of a sense of authority and judgment, and this results from the military career is of necessity a period of being useful and leaderless.

But the experiences they have had have been surrounded, the frontier on his skillful ability to hold his own in small business and one of the reasons for the existence of the world in general.

No such past, six weeks, has been the story of the American soldier, and I feel that the future is bright for the members of the faculty of Michigan State College of 1942, that must still be a source of apprehension to the students in the college that they may be the last influx of veterans, has been answered to my satisfaction as I am confident it will also be answered to their also.

Rundle's Secret

"It has been the story of a generation that the faculty of Michigan State College of 1942, that must still be a source of apprehension to the students in the college that they may be the last influx of veterans, has been answered to my satisfaction as I am confident it will also be answered to their also.

227 N. Washington
FRANKFURT, Germany, Nov. 9—(AP)—A triumphant return of a few hours' duration by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower would bring the war home for a few hundred Berliners before Gen. Omar Bradley. Eisenhower said today that the war had left a lasting impression on the people of Germany. He said that the visit to the city would be a goodwill mission and that the people of Berlin would be made aware of the American people's determination to win the war.

The general arrived in Berlin early today after a short trip to the eastern front. He was met at the American headquarters by Col. John T. Multi, the assistant chief of staff, and Col. Bernard C. Hirt, the chief of staff for the 12th Army Group.

Eisenhower expressed his appreciation for the hospitality extended to him by the people of Berlin. He said that the trip had been a revelation to him and that he had come away with a renewed determination to do everything possible to win the war. He also emphasized the importance of maintaining close ties with the people of Berlin and the other cities visited on his trip.

The general concluded his remarks by saying that the war was a matter of life and death for the people of Berlin, and that he hoped that they would continue to support the American cause until victory is achieved.
