Students Lead Normal College Life

By SYLVIA STASSE

In the summer of the past, Michigan State Agricultural College students who were not employed would often be found hanging out at the college radio station, WRKS, where they would advise their friends in the same position to come and listen to the music and meet the people. However, the majority of the college students do not have jobs and are therefore unable to pay for the privilege of listening to music at WRKS. The only way they can afford to listen to music is by purchasing a subscription to the college paper, The Michigan State Student, which is published weekly. The subscription fee is $1.50 for a year.

Helping Hands Point Way For Blind

By CHARLES PHILLIPS

This is a story about a group of students who have organized a club called "Helping Hands." The club is made up of volunteers who are willing to help blind people in their daily lives. The club meets every Wednesday afternoon at the Student Union and provides services such as escorting students to class, helping them find their way around campus, and even helping them with their assignments. The club is open to all students, and anyone who wishes to be a member of the club is welcome to attend the meetings. The club is sponsored by the Department of Vocational Rehabilitation, and the members are trained in the skills they need to help the blind. The club is a great way for students to give back to the community and make a difference in the lives of the blind.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

It has been a pleasure to correspond with you and have enjoyed the discussions we have had. However, I feel the need to express my concerns regarding the recent events and developments. As a member of the community, I believe it is important for us to come together and address these issues. I hope that our conversation can continue in a constructive manner.

Yours sincerely,

Democracy requires to be liked and feared by those in power.

By William F. Buckley Jr., in The American Spectator

In a recent speech, Buckley discussed the importance of a healthy democracy. He argued that democracy requires to be liked and feared by those in power. Buckley believes that a healthy democracy is one in which the citizens feel a sense of responsibility for their actions, and fear the consequences of those actions. He further stated that a democracy that is not liked and feared by its citizens is a dangerous one.
