Korean Students State Views On War Situation

Suspected Slayer

By PAT YARDOCH

Four pairs of eyes at K.I.S.S. march yesterday to Korea with personal interest. They belong to the four Korean students on campus.

Sue Lee. Senior, Korea, a daughter of an English employee, wants the United States to help prevent Korean from war, largely conducing. She also wants to serve the Chinese people.

Then when the Korean and American student teams in the room, the Korean was still smiling. "That's man. I'm not a bad Korean," he said. "And also in the United States because of the Korean."

Her brother, sister, mother and father are all in the room, by Sue Song Chin, also from South Korea, has been studying at K.I.S.S. for the last year. He enjoys the English language, representing news of the United States to the Korean. He hadn't heard from them for a long time. He is looking forward to the new life he will have in the United States. His father, who is a teacher in Korea, has been doing a lot of reading to stay up with the news.

The Korean student on the right, who is the same age as Sue Song Chin, was looking for information from family. He hasn't heard from them for a long time.
