O'Neill's Play Enacted with Emotion, Zest

By L. W. CHATMAN

Curtain rises on the play, "O'Neill's". It is a pity that the cast cannot be seen in their full glory. The play is a masterpiece of acting and direction, but it is impossible to see the faces of the actors because of the lighting. The cast is well-matched and the play is well-staged, but it is impossible to see the faces of the actors because of the lighting.

Press and Ideals

The much-debated question of what should be a newspaper's moral responsibility is at present receiving much interest in the National Newspaper Association in Los Angeles.

Evaluating newsmen, some of the nation's top editors decided that today's papers are not fulfilling the requirements set for themselves. That the editors aded that their papers are not fulfilling the requirements set for themselves. The result of these studies has been an increased interest in the "ideal newspaper".

Joseph Pulitzer said in his New York World in 1885 that the press should be "an institution that should always fight for progress and reform, never tolerate injustice and corruption, always fight demagogues of all parties, never belong to any party, always expose privileged classes and public plunder."

The writers who wished to meet the challenge of Pulitzer's criticism may have been dissatisfied with merely writing "good" or "bad" papers, but they were forced to think of many other ways to fulfill their obligations.

Emphasis of the two column and the smallest number of words are two things that have been added to the "ideal newspaper" since Pulitzer's time.

All three have the same basic freedom to find and report the truth, and freedom to criticize.

Pressmen are high, difficult to achieve in the complex and often unethical society in which the American press operates. Willingness to go up to those ideals make a newspaper great, not an obligation.

Lecture Night

For Service Given

Unspeakably descriptive for continued service in one of the most绩畜ing things student can receive. Tonight's group of contributions will be honored for their service at traditional "Lecture Night" ceremonies.

For the past 32 years senior women have been honored at similar ceremonies, which are highlighted by passing down of lights lanterns, symbolizing responsibility, from graduating seniors to underclassmen.

The parade of lights lanterns, singing of college songs and personal interest of President and Mrs. Hannah as well as students in the affairs make a part of the excitement of the play of events.

Although only seniors are honored for their activities in undergraduate classes have a large part in the ceremony. Their representatives are those who should symbolically carry on every year at MSU.

There are few traditions of MSU which will be remem-bered longer than this simple program. Make sure you don't miss it.

Letter to the Editor

Congress' Terms for Dance Aid Criticized

To the Editor:

I think the whole point you make in your column about the "dance aid" is well taken. It is perfectly reasonable that a student who has volunteered for this year's dance aid should have the right to a scholarship in the near future. It is only right that the student who has worked hard should receive a scholarship in return.

I think you are right in saying that if the student does not get a scholarship in the near future, he should be given some other type of compensation. For example, he should be given a small scholarship each year for a number of years, until he receives a regular scholarship. This would be much better than the present system of giving scholarships only to those who have volunteered for dance aid.

It is only right that the student who has volunteered for this year's dance aid should be given some type of compensation.

Sincerely,

Irish Spartan Seeks Tarants For Pastime

Pete Nagle, Drummer of the 6th Irish Army, is a fast-timer with a baton. In fact, he's a baton with a couple of hundred tarants in his repertoire. Tarants, of course, are a class of venomous crustaceans from which the Norfolk, Virginia-based unit gets its nickname. Each of Nagle's batons contains a tarantula.

The 20-year-old cadet, who is a senior at the University of Michigan, has been on the Drum Line for four years, but this is the first time he's ever used tarants in a performance. He estimates that he has over 100 tarants on his baton, and he plans to use them in a show this weekend.
