The German Treaties — A Test

The signing of two documents making West Germany an independent partner in European defense is a big step in the direction of international cooperation. But ratification will show the validity of effective efforts to unify the West against Communism have been.

The two treaties, the Western Allied Agreement and the European Defense Community Agreement, would bind Germany and her traditional allies, France, in their first military alliance. The agreements advance Britain's frontier, just the Berlin and other points.

Most important of all to Americans, the treaties involve a permanent U.S. defense commitment separate from NATO.

U.S. diplomacy has a turn toward internationalism since the Atlantic Charter, U.S. membership, setting up of NATO, the Marshall Plan, and the Korean police action. Such far-reaching commitments on the part of our government are disconcerting to many nations, but seem to reflect a realistic attitude toward the world situation.

If the United States is to hold her own against Communism, such commitments as the German treaties are vitally necessary.

Two documents signed last Monday and Tuesday commit a major commitment, special agreements and declara-

The Contractual Agreement is a peace treaty between U.S., France, and Britain which ends the occupation and abolishes the Allied High Commission. However, an aid to German security, the Allies agree to keep troops stationed there as a defense force. The West Germans also agree to raise troops for the European Defense Community.

Second agreement for the Defense Community provides for the creation of NATO's defense and, establishes a pool of armed forces from West Germany, France, Italy, Belgium and Luxemburg, which will be at the NATO command's disposal.

because the treaties have been signed does not mean that they will be accepted by the nations involved. The U.S. Senate will probably act before it assumes for reception publishing. In other nations, ratification difficulties may arise because of pressure from the Communists.

Even German ratification is not a positive conclusion. Soviet pressure on the East German concentration on the desire of the Germans to be a united nation. The left, including German Socialists, argue that the treaties are a symbol of Germany divided. Signing the contract will antagonize the Russians and make the division of Germany and Berlin permanent. Another rising fear is that because of the new agreements, Germany might well become another Korea.

In any event last week may diminish the firm stand by the Allies. However, Communist propaganda may affect ratification outside Germany as well as it.

British charges alleged the Allies declare that the U.S. does not want a peace treaty, or the unification of Germany, and that the Adenauer government would press for a new war to recover lost territories if such a treaty were signed. Communists urge that the French, British and Americans meet with Russia to frame a treaty to unite Germany.

Such Communist demands are aimed at Soviet objectives and are being turned down for now. All agreed that a mistrustful atmosphere.

The West Germans will do to present advantage is stormy. Probably the decisions have only begun. The great question of joint, non-aggressive American-British adherence seems to be involved in the battle for ratification. The country and forces of that kind of national agreement or conflict will be the question to the question. A refusal would make the stakes higher than for American prestige.
