Whistlingstopp Harry

President Truman, speaking in Lansing yesterday, made what he described as a 'final speech in favor of Gov. Stevenson. The President maintained during the course of this expression, that this race is one where there is a final score, which is 1-0. He felt that the Pennsylvania election had been a turning point in the campaign. He emphasized that the campaign was a fight for the future, and that the President was fighting for the future of the country.

In conclusion, he said that he was going to work hard for the election and that he was going to fight hard for the country. He emphasized that the campaign was a fight for the future, and that the President was fighting for the future of the country.

End of the Line

By Don McFarlane

Hold on to your seats. The election special is about to pull into the station where it will stop for another four years.

In another two weeks, the race for the presidency will be over. The candidate who wins will be the next President of the United States. The campaign has been intense and has captured the nation's attention.

And now, the big question: Who will win? The polls are closed and the results are in. The winner will be announced later today.

And the winner is... Einstein! The famous dog has won the presidential election. He defeated the incumbent, President Boone, in a landslide victory.

And about the thousand of votes cast in the candy-making contest. Do you think they enjoyed seeing the general giving himself an egg? Not on your life.

And then there was the time Einstein was handed a sweet, sweet treat, and he didn't eat it. The photographer captured the moment. It was a special day for everyone.
