MSC 'Not Responding,' Lecture Fans Complain

To the Editor:

As part-time students who have perniciously ignored other universities and colleges, one often finds itself struggling to keep afloat on the sometimes-forgotten campus of Western Michigan College. These struggles, though varying in degree, are the result of constant financial stress. In a way that range from practical, to emotional, to individual, and are perpetuated by faculty, administrators, and students alike.

Considering that MSC is one of several operations that have not responded to student demands, one is left with a sense of frustration. It is often difficult to find anyone who will listen to the concerns of students.

We are referring to the fact that the administration, in addition to being unresponsive, has created an atmosphere of fear and intimidation. There are several allegations of misconduct by faculty members, and these allegations have not been thoroughly investigated.

It is our hope that the administration will take these concerns seriously and work to create a more inclusive and supportive environment for all students.
