Sweetheart' Crowning
Formal Dances
Top Weekend

By MARY DOODER

The crowning of the Sweetheart of Sigma Chi and baton of tomorrow will top the weekend's activities in social events.

Twice Coeds

Ever try to give directions to someone who can't read? I tried this weekend and ended up more confused than the stranger.

He wanted to know where the Auditorium was. I told him it was the big brick building. He turned in several directions and then gave me a puzzled look. "But, they are all brick," he said. I tried to explain that the Auditorium was only one of many brick buildings on campus, but he was still confused.

The Delta Sigma Phi background on Mermaid and the ATOU brunch, who also came, were also lost in the confusion.

40 Years at MSC, But Professor Still Doesn't Think of Loafing

By JAN BRENNING

When Dr. Milton T. Gess was 24, his family thought he was going to follow in his father’s footsteps and take over his dad’s medical practice. But Dr. Gess didn’t want to play it safe.

He left the Midwest to go to medical school at the University of Chicago, where he got his medical degree and went on to specialize in surgery.

Now, at the age of 64, he’s still working in the medical field, and he’s not about to retire any time soon. In fact, he’s working harder than ever.

He believes that the best way to keep his mind sharp is to keep it active. And that’s why he’s still teaching and practicing medicine.

Dr. Gess is a professor at Michigan State University and has been for 40 years. He’s taught generations of students and has never lost his passion for learning.

He says that the most important thing he’s learned is to never stop learning. And that’s why he’s still going strong, even after all these years.

“After all these years, I still love what I do,” Dr. Gess says. “It’s not just a job, it’s a way of life.”

He’s seen a lot of changes in the medical field over the years, but he’s always been able to adapt. And that’s why he’s still going strong.

He’s a role model for all of his students, showing them that age is just a number and that you can still be successful no matter how old you are.

Dr. Gess has been a member of the Michigan State University Board of Trustees for 30 years and is still an active member of the community.

He’s a living testament to the fact that you can never be too old to pursue your dreams. And that’s why he’s still going strong, even after all these years.

McDonald, Baldacci Vie For Quarterback Post

DETROIT — The big man with the little hat who was to lead Michigan in football's most important position this season was almost ready to do so when he arrived at his team's practice field Saturday afternoon. He was Paul McDonald, the fourth-year junior quarterback who replaced Michigan's other quarterback, John Dodge, who was unable to practice because of an injury.

McDonald, who has been the Big Ten's leading passer the past two years, was the only Michigan quarterback to practice Saturday. He is expected to start against Notre Dame Saturday.

John Dodge, who is recovering from a knee injury, did not practice. He is listed as questionable for the game.

Another Michigan quarterback, Jim Zemke, is also recovering from a knee injury and is listed as questionable for the game.

Michigan has a four-quarterback system with Zemke, McDonald, John Dodge and Jim Zemke. McDonald is the starter, but the other three are expected to see action in the game.

Michigan won the Battle of the Big Ten Saturday, 18-17, against Illinois, to move into the lead in the conference standings. McDonald completed six of 13 passes for 121 yards and scored a touchdown.

Michigan's game against Notre Dame will be the first game for both teams in the Big Ten. Michigan is the defending conference champion and Notre Dame is the defending national champion.
