STATE BUDGET CUTS BUILDING APPROPRIATION

Last Term at State
Power of Water, Says Fellman

"Our greatest security will be found in maintaining our freedom" advised David Fellman, University of Wisconsin political science professor, at the opening conference of the Freedom and Security symposium.

The next in the series of four symposium programs began with a panel discussion of Dr. Robert West, director of the Institute of Public Administration, New York City; William E. Newsome, dean of Social Work, University of Pittsburgh; and Dr. Fellman himself.

Fellman continued his theme on the symposium topic with the belief that "our whole civilization rests on the provision that we are free." It is necessary, he maintained, to maintain the credibility of our government. "Anybody can make the pretense that he is a government official," he said, "but it is the citizens who have to live with the consequences."

"If we are to go on to the next generation without security, we must have a system of law, and if we are to go on to the next generation without freedom, we must have a system of government."

Williams' Request Slashed

State to Receive $3,710,000

A much-reduced budget for new construction at Michigan State and other Michigan educational institutions during the coming year was introduced Tuesday in the state Senate.

Prepared by the Senate Appropriations Committee, the bill would give new colleges a total of $1,710,000. This amount is less than half the $2,310,000 being sought by Governor G. Mennen Williams.

Michigan State's share of the construction budget would be $1,210,000. Williams had planned to give the university at least $500,000.

Of the construction funds, $500,000 is to go to the agricultural experiment stations, $200,000 for university extension work, $50,000 for the chemical library, and $300,000 for the physical plant.

Michigan State would also have $120,000 for research work during the year, and the state would receive $1,210,000 for maintenance of existing buildings.

The remaining $1,210,000 would be used to cover normal expenses, and would be spent at the rate of $1,210,000 per year.

Also due to receive slashed budgets are the other Michigan educational institutions.

Williams had recommended $1,500,000 for the University of Michigan, which has been reduced to $700,000.
