Powerful Passing Attack Crushes Stanford, 38-14

Spartans Pass for 191 Yards

Scare Three TD’s In First Quarter

By Jack Berry

Michigan State against Stanford looked exactly the opposite of the Michigan State squad that played at Ann Arbor a week ago. Scoring in every period Saturday, the Spartans built themselves up through their efforts, the opposite of their organization, as they crushed the Indians, 38-14.

The Spartans scored on their opening possession at 2:46 into the first quarter, as they accounted for 38 of the 39 first half points. The only Stanford score of the opening half was on a 30-yard field goal by Virginia Shubert with 13 seconds left in the half.

The score was 21-3 at the half, and it was 38-14 at the end of the game.

The game was played before a crowd of 26,750 in Memorial Stadium at Berkeley, Calif., and was the first meeting of Stanford and Michigan State.

The Spartans, who scored on their opening possession, were 6-0-0 and the Indians were 5-4-0.

The crowd was particularly impressed by Michigan State’s passing attack, which accounted for 191 yards in the game.

End of the Line
Peron Follows Tyrannts' Trail

Baron, long clean and another villain bites the dust.

This was the end of President Juan Peron, the episode that followed the passing of Evita. For years, Peron had been the tyrant of Argentina, revered by some and reviled by others. His rule was marked by both success and failure, and his legacy is still debated today.

During the Peronist era, Peron played the role of dictator with the United States. This was no surprise, as the United States had been a major player in the region for many years. The United States was particularly interested in the future of the region, and this interest was reflected in its policies towards the Peron era.

The Peronist era was marked by both success and failure. On the one hand, Peron was able to bring economic stability to the region, and this was reflected in the growth of the economy. On the other hand, the Peronist era was marked by the rise of a number of political groups, including the Mario Peronists, who were opposed to the rule of the Peronist party.

Now the party is over. Following last month's successful revolution, Peron was forced to give up his throne and flee to Paraguay. A new government, one that seems to be more devoted to constitutional liberties, was installed in his place.

Peron is no longer the Eagle of the Andes, but a man, an embattled former dictator, living in the rugged beauty of past glories. Evita was spared the final downfall, as well as the knowledge that Peron had not been exactly faithful to her valued memory.

Another chapter in political history is closed, and another tyrant has learned that people can stand a man shot for just a little before they ask for more back.

What causes a man to want to become a dictator is a question for politicians. What causes a man to endure him, even for a short time, is a question for society.

It is sad to see these questions continue to arise. The South American people have always sailed their people into a tidal wave of philosophy. Anyone who is old enough can remember the theme song from "Hail!" and "Viva il Duce" when Hitler and Mussolini proceeded to gain power for the state. Peron had a large and powerful following in the Confederation General de Trabajo, which may still have an influence in the future course of Argentine politics.

Although it is rightly outside that the American people will ever fall for a dictator of the Peron stamp, it will never hurt us to be our own guard. The time always elicits tyrants, but that don't stop the others from trying.

Odom's Job Difficulties

Pointed Out by Reader

To the Editor:

The recent article appeared in the State News under the above head. Correcting the title of the article suggests that the correct title is "Odom's Job Difficulties: Pointed Out by Reader." The article states that Odom, father of three, did not have enough money to pay the bills, and Odom was forced to leave his job at the University of Michigan as a result of financial difficulty.

The story suggests that the University of Michigan has a policy of paying its employees a minimum wage of $1.00 per hour, and that Odom was unable to make ends meet on this salary.

I am writing to ask if you would be interested in publishing this article. We believe that it is important to bring this issue to the attention of the public, and we hope that you will consider the matter.

Sincerely yours,

ND Uncosed On State to Be Grid Capital As Irish invade Sparta

by KEITH MILLER

East Lansing will be the "Playoff Capital" of the country this weekend when the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame invade Memorial Stadium for a Saturday encounter.

As a result of Notre Dame's 24-16 triumph over Marquette, of the East and Michigan State's 31-10 rout of Michigan, the Irish has been added to this year's classic.

The Irish will come rolling into East Lansing as the title of "unbeaten, unbeaten, unbeaten" as their three first games of the current campaign. With 10 wins, the Irish have a rated as the best team in the nation according to the Big Ten coaches and the third-best team in the nation, according to the coaches at the Big Ten schools.

As an added feature, the Big Ten and the Michigan State will be represented by the "Purple and Gold" of the Big Ten and the "Orange and Black" of the Michigan State.

Spartan Pistol Club on Target

The pistol match is a popular event in which the competitors learn to shoot on their own range and then meet other clubs in the other competitions.

Ammonium and targets are provided without cost to the MOUT and the university supplies the weapons, all of which are provided without charge.

The club is divided into four league teams, namely, MOUT and varsity. They compete in different types of matches, postal and Army Military Academy, the Naval United States, Reserve Army and Woman's.

For members of the league and all members of the University, the match is a popular event.
