Student Body Praised
Admirers Send State a Bouquet

"What's wrong with college students?" seems to be an ever-present question these days, with derisive and morbid criticism leveled at adolescents,ARC experts, parents, and the general public.

Michigan State students take heart from this criticism, as it was a pleasure to read a letter from John F. McDole, Dean of Students at the University of Pennsylvania.

The letter was written on behalf of McDonald and Boulevard, director of public relations at futures, who were on campus for the Association of Evangelical Colleges and Universities meeting. The following is an excerpt:

"I am sure you could tell from our bagged look how much we were impressed with Michigan State above and beyond the magnificent physical plant. Wally and I were both impressed with the boys and girls we met and talked to.

An institution could have a student body of river from a thousand kids. Their enthusiasm and pride in State was obvious, and their knowledge of its operation, the occasion and theory behind the Basic College plan, and everything else from football to philosophy—all these added up to a lasting impression on us."

Sports are not beyond criticism, by any means; however, we also have plenty of reasons for praise. This letter, coming from men with long professional experience on the American college scene, should give us all a chance for a future on the level.

Faure to Tell UN of Plan

PARIS - Premier Edgar Faure said Sunday his plan for world disarmament coupled with aid to backward areas would be carried to the United Nations Tuesday if his government is still in power.

Faure first outlined his plan at the time of the July summit conference in Geneva. It calls for a percentage cut in arms spending to finance aid to the poorest countries, with any money saved to be used to develop new areas of the world.

He said Sunday that he had asked Pierre Bley, a minister with special powers delegated to the Premier to take the disarmament plan to the UN.

'Unusual Optimism' in Big 10

Court Mentors Hiding Crying Towels

CHICAGO 11 - Crying towels aren't needed this season for Big Ten basketball coaches, who are generally cheerful with the exception of a few who may reflect unusual optimism.

They agree that defending champions Iowa and Illinois, returning with Minnesota, will be tough to catch.

Artie Reaves, Iowa and Illinois, who are locked with Wisconsin as well as promising newcomers, will be the top contenders.

Rutgers, Iowa and Illinois, who are placed in the Western district, along with Michigan, will be watched for a shot at the Western.

The group is excited, as are the fans, for the Big Ten tournament.

"We will have more depth and height this year," he said.

"And the coaches this year are more willing to give us our money's worth," he added.

A similar outlook is held by Big Ten coaches, who believe their teams have the ability to win.

"We have more depth and height," he said.

"We have the ability to win," he added.

The coaches are ready to start the season and are eagerly awaiting the first game.
