State News Managing Editor

A revamped Spartan, campus humor magazine, will be distributed free "with no strings attached" during fall term registration, editor V. Glen Washburn an- nounced.

And, said Washburn, the magazine will keep its original name and will run the same types of humor and humor- istic material as in the past.

The new Spartan will be distributed on a student-fee basis through the Student Service Bureau, which will have them ready for distribution the day after the registration period.

The idea of producing a camp- us magazine is part of a program to make the campus more attractive to students. The magazine will be produced by the Student Service Bureau and will be distributed free to all students.

There will be a staff of 20 students, including the editor, who will be responsible for the content of the magazine. The magazine will be produced in two parts, one for the first term and one for the second term.

The first part will be devoted to the general public, while the second part will be devoted to the students of the university.

Washburn said the magazine will contain a number of features that will include humor, cartoons, and features. There will also be a "Spartan Special" section, featuring news and events of the university, which will be distributed weekly.

The opera will be presented at the Royal Opera House in London, and will be directed by the renowned British director Peter Hall.

What Happened to MSU's Cheesecake?

Cheesecake, the popular dessert served at Michigan State University, has been missing in action for several weeks.

According to university officials, the dessert's disappearance is due to a lack of demand.

"We typically serve the dessert once a week, but with the recent changes in student schedules, we have noticed a decline in interest," said one official.

Cheesecake, which is made in-house, has been a popular dessert on campus for many years.

Despite the decline in demand, university officials are hoping to bring the dessert back to the menu in the near future.

Michigan's Chimes Will Be Silent for a Year

The chimes, which are located on the campus of Michigan State University, will be silent for a year.

This is due to the university's decision to revamp the chime system to improve its sound quality.

The chimes, which are made of bronze and weigh a total of 53 tons, were installed in 1956.

They are rung by a carillonneur, who plays the chimes using a set of pedals and keys.

The chimes are a popular attraction on campus and are often used for special occasions and events.

The chimes will be silenced for a year while the renovation work is completed.

During this time, students and visitors will be able to enjoy a different type of music on campus, which will be played through a series of speakers located around the campus.

The university hopes that this will provide a better sound experience for those enjoying the music.
Marine Court-Martial Is Trying ‘The System’

The court martial of Sgt. Matthew McKeon, 23, on Thursday, was marked by charges of insubordination and court-martial. The case is the first to be heard in the Marine Corps in years.

McKeon is charged with two counts of desertion and two counts of “aiding the escape” of another. He is also charged with “threatening the life” of another service member.

McKeon had been assigned to a unit in the Far East, but he was accused of deserting in December of last year.

When he was last seen, he was reportedly heading towards the border with China. His desertion was discovered by his superiors, who issued a warrant for his arrest.

McKeon was arrested in China after a week-long manhunt. He was taken into custody by Chinese authorities and then transferred to a U.S. military facility.

The court martial will hear evidence from both sides and make a decision on whether to discharge the charge.

Scientists Find Way To Check Impure Water

A group of scientists at the University of California, Berkeley, have developed a new method to check for impurities in water. The method involves using a special type of bacteria that can detect specific contaminants.

The researchers, led by Dr. John Smith, have patented the method and are looking for companies interested in licensing it.

The method works by introducing a special type of bacteria into the water sample. The bacteria then detect any impurities and release a signal that can be measured.

The new method is faster and more accurate than existing methods. It can detect impurities at levels that are currently undetectable.
