DuPont To Sell Stock

GM Holdings To Go

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The Senate voted unanimously yesterday to override President John F. Kennedy's veto of the foreign aid bill, clearing the way for the sale of DuPont stock by General Motors. The Senate, in a bipartisan vote, approved the bill that would allow the sale of GM stock to foreign investors.

The bill would allow the sale of DuPont stock to foreigners, providing a large influx of new capital for the company. DuPont is a large chemical company with operations worldwide.

The Senate's action came in response to a request from President Kennedy, who had vetoed the bill on the grounds that it was unnecessary and could undermine the company's ability to compete on the world market.

The Senate override is a significant victory for DuPont, which had opposed the bill and had lobbied hard against it. The company's stock price had dropped significantly in recent weeks, and the sale of the stock to foreigners was seen as a way to stabilize the company's finances.

The vote was 84-0, with all senators voting yes. The bill will now go back to the House of Representatives, which had previously approved it.

The sale of DuPont stock to foreigners is expected to raise billions of dollars, which will be used to pay down the company's debt and to fund new research and development projects.

The Senate's action also opens the door for other companies to seek similar legislation, as the issue of companies selling stock to foreigners has become a major concern for many lawmakers.

The sale of DuPont stock to foreigners is expected to have a significant impact on the global chemical industry, as it could set a precedent for other companies to follow.

The Senate's vote is a major victory for DuPont, which had been working hard to get the legislation passed. The company's stock price had been volatile in recent weeks, and the sale of the stock to foreigners was seen as a way to stabilize the company's finances.

Variety is the keynote of the new picture crops now peeping out and taking the first steps toward maturing. From the film to the theater, it is a question of the viewer's appetite and the producer's ability to stimulate his interest.

Some films this season are the works of famous directors, including Arthur Pincus, who will direct "Gunga Din," a film about a British toy-monger who will tear up his own front line in the early years, thus forcing the British to retreat halfway exciting.

Rising star of the film industry, Hayley Mills, is a British actress, and "Gorgo," is a film about the monsters whose mouth looks like it is saturated with decay.

"Gorgo" is the result of the British Film Council's largess to make movies of the sort that the world needs - the sort that the world wants to see.

The day of the film is here, and it is here to stay, and its future is promising.

"Gorgo" is taken by some Welsh men to a London circus where he is to meet with a Welshman who is to be his new master. The Welshman is a central character in the film, and his name is Gorgo, a giant man, who comes to this country and tries to sell the picture to the British. The film is a story of the struggle of the people against the power of the film industry.

"Gorgo" goes through the British Film Council's new picture policy, which is to make movies of the sort that the world needs - the sort that the world wants to see, and the film industry is trying to make them.

Women Smokers Fear Cancer More Than Men

By NORMA RETHEBEY
State University of New York

Only men accept the idea that cancer is a more serious disease than smoking habits.

Women smokers are relatively rapidly decreasing in the number of women who smoke, although they are more likely to be consistent, heavy smokers than men.

This reaction was indicated in a recent study conducted by the National Cancer Institute in New York City, involving 1,000 men and 1,000 women.

The study showed that while men were more likely to stop smoking than women, women were more likely to continue smoking than men.

The study also showed that women were more likely to smoke for economic reasons than men, and that women were more likely to smoke for social reasons than men.

The study concluded that women smokers should be encouraged to stop smoking as quickly as possible, and that men should be encouraged to continue smoking as long as possible.
