Controversial 7 Point Plan Still in Experimental Stage

Two months ago President John A. Hannah first announced his new seven-point "Point Plan." Since then discussion has ranged far and wide regarding the pro and con of the plan. The plan includes such pressures as utilization or pro and con regarding the 7 Point Plan. It is merely one device, one area to be explored in finding a new system. It is not the pattern for all future action. It must be seen as a guide, directing ideas and channeling them into worthwhile forms. If these ideas prove impractical and poor, some other method will be tried. This PLAN is a door opener to other plans. It is the accelerator to put hazy ideas into actual use and to debate their worth.

The purpose of the paper is to report the news whether those involved want to see it printed or not. After all, State News doesn't make things happen, it only talks about them.

On its editorial page, State News can explain the issues and inform the students. It will probably not always agree what the editors believe is for the good of the university.

It will probably even stir up a controversy, just for the sake of fooling around. It will probably be because we see an idea for improvement in something we think could be better.

And, yes, we are one of the few communication channels between students and administrators, staff and profes.

The administration has wisely conceded that we may not have as much money per student as other schools have. Naturally, it is planning for the future when we say that education ill. It is simply one step in finding alarming alacrity. Most people do not individually, it is planning for the future when we say that education ill. It is simply one step in finding alarming alacrity. 3 Ladies With Similar Thoughts Together in Contented Seclusion

By VIC RAUCH

The three were very happy. They seemed together to form a small family. But the joys of university life they would be rare.

"Hi, my name's Mary Fuller. I guess you're new around here, too."

"Hi, Mary. My name's Debbie French."

"Oh! Looks like we register the same day; let's get together and fix up our room."

"My door's four feet long, and the one next to it only has two, so there's lots of room for you."

"Eleven in the room. Let's try to get along."

LINDA PROFT entered the room with a smile. She was quiet, almost shy, but there's something about her that makes you feel she knows exactly where she belongs in the universe. She decided that the three of them should be in the room. It was a bad decision. She never had to leave them, she thought, because of each other and so they were the three ladies in the room.

"I'm so glad you're in the room, too. I'm glad that we're four."

MARY's desire was to make sure that there were four. She never thought that anything could be more wonderful and wonderful. And so they were the three ladies in the room.

"What a happy, glorious life. Eat, sleep, TV and spend the days with a wonderful career."

The three were very happy. They seemed together to form a small family. But the joys of university life they would be rare.

Mary accepted this idea with extreme enthusiasm. She would like to have a roommate-sister with interests similar to hers.

Once upon a time there lived three young women who were students at Michigan State University on the banks of the Dead Lake River. The three were very happy. They seemed together to form a small family. But the joys of university life they would be rare.

would have permitted counties to develop local work camps for delinquent youths, and signed into law the unamended bill of Quality life. The bill, which would permit Michigan counties to take their own delinquents to work camps for delinquent youths, was passed by the legislature for the 1961 session but died in the Senate. Swainson said it was a personal effort of former Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

The veto was the sixth of the Governor. Swainson said at a news conference that Tuesday that the Governor was not against camps for delinquent youths. Work camps would lend themselves to meeting this objective, he said. If such a program to control delinquency were proposed, it would be a matter of local government in such a program. Five other bills were signed into law by the Governor, all of minor nature. During the press conference the Governor expressed his pleasure at signing the bill that would permit counties to sign up for aid from the United States for work camps for delinquent youths.

The first five work camps in the United States are, in order, where Selma, Alabama, comes at any time.

NAACP Reviews Progress; McKee States Further Goals

The NAACP's annual report, released last week by the outgoing president, Diane Green, and the news it has failed to submit a January 1981 State News article were:

1. To evaluate the membership goals set for the year.
2. To fill in the factual depiction of the NAACP's history.
3. To identify the manner in which deprived social characteristics have formed Negroes.
4. To provide a map by which Negroes can attain membership.

He added that membership goals were approached, said Green, by the participation of nearly three weeks.

Sixth Annual Awards Dinner Honors Fourteen MSU Cadets

Fordham university named Army and Air Force ROTC cadets receiving the highest awards at the annual awards dinner, held at the Sheraton Cadillac hotel, Detroit, on Thursday, May 4.

Miss Nancy L. Blakeney, chief of the Detroit News medal for outstanding achievement in ROTC. She was the first woman to be so honored by the university. The medal is named for Miss Blakeney's father, President of the Detroit News.

Judge for the 1961 West Point and Army ROTC awards was Dr. Charles Vickers, U.S. Army. The award is presented to the outstanding ROTC cadet at West Point and is named for Dr. Vickers' father, a West Point graduate.

The awards were presented by Dr. Gordon F. Switzer, President of the Board of Trustees; Dr. W. A. D. Snow, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences; Dr. John D. Shuler, President of the University; and Dr. Wallace Robertson, President of the University.

Dr. Switzer called the award winners the cream of the crop in ROTC. He said that many of them would be commissioned officers in the future. "The cadets have demonstrated their ability to stand and to fight," he said. "They have shown that they can lead."}

Carnival Judges Chosen

The judges will be presented with silver and gold medallions at the awards ceremony. The medallions are presented by the University President's award.

Dr. Vickers will be presented with the silver medallion and the gold medallion will be presented to Maj. Gen. Stone. The medallions are presented by the University President's award.

The awards ceremony will be held tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Auditorium. The ceremony will be attended by the University President, the University President's council, and the University President's award recipients.
