Ranger 3 Camera Would Have Failed, Report Says

PARAISON, Mont.-A malfunction of an Atlas missile caused at least partly responsible for the failure of the Ranger 3 spacecraft to hit the moon last month, scientists and Wednesday.

But, they said, Ranger 3 probably would have failed in any case because it was designed to perform as planned. The Ranger 3 spacecraft could not have obtained good pictures of the lunar surface, scientists said, and the cameras containing a microcinematic film were not working when the spacecraft hit the moon.

Collier's jet propulsion laboratory, which built Ranger 3, Early last month in a news conference reported on the project. Collier's director, Dr. John F. Cruse, said that the spacecraft hit the moon, but that the camera film was not available for study.

The camera film is today at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in Maryland, where the spacecraft hit the moon.

Senators calculate now that it is months before the spacecraft makes another attempt to hit the moon. The Ranger 3 spacecraft was 28,000 miles away from earth and traveling 25,000 miles per hour when it hit the moon.

Project officers did not say what island government may take place a graduate become would now be small and could not be used as an instrument for taking the pictures of the lunar surface.

Good photographs of the moon were expected with a second stage, but it was dropped before the spacecraft hit the moon.

"There are many people in this country who would have been pleased if it had hit the moon and failed," one senator said.

Boy Scouts Govern East Lansing for a Day

The Boy Scouts of East Lansing took over the city hall for the day by assuming the duties of local politicians. The boys, under the leadership of their Scoutmaster, held a regular City Council meeting.

The boys held office for a period of two hours and attempted to conduct business in a manner resembling that of city officials. They discussed issues such as the city budget, traffic, and recreational facilities.

The boys' actions were in line with the city's efforts to involve the youth in civic affairs and foster a sense of responsibility among the younger generation.

Judge Denies Ban in PT-109 Dispute

A New York judge has denied a request to ban the PT-109, a World War II era PT boat, from being placed on display at the New York Maritime Museum. The museum's request for a temporary restraining order was denied on the grounds that the PT-109 was a historically significant vessel.

The PT-109, where John F. Kennedy was the executive officer, is currently on display at the National World War II Museum in New Orleans.
