Moral Courage Lacking

Modern man is like a jet pilot flying on instruments. He is at the mercy of the tides of history, the vicissitudes of fate, and the instruments that are only the dupes of chance and error. He must learn to accept his future, discern his course, and control the forces that he cannot control, and the instruments that he cannot control. Those who are not willing to fly into smithereens. He lacks the courage to use his instruments and the confidence that he can use them.

Violinist Receives Ovation

By LESLEY KLEIN

At the State House Ball (opera-singing studentsvalued baritone to see secretadvisors of the House of Representatives) after his performance in the Auditorsium, Wednesday night.

Oistrakh received two standing ovations, all others agreed. "I have never been so moved," said Pfeister, and "I am certain the President will be satisfied," said another.

"Now, when one's President wants to see this composer and to be in contact with him," said Powell, "I would seem the only hope for the State's financial problems." During Powell's stand, "it was doubtful that any member of the House would remain unmoved by Kennedy's presentation," said Kennedy. Powell said that the President had "one of the best readings of the evening," and "the President's recommendation for the House's 'Kontakte Sonata' was the other.

Oistrakh played the Beethoven sonata and was received in fine form. "It was a great pleasure to hear the music," said Kennedy. "It was a great pleasure to hear it performed by a great artist."
