Con-Con Delegate Faxon Finds Youth No Handicap

By GARY BOSKERG
Of the State News Staff

The youngest delegate to the Constitutional Convention, Jack Faxon, is being sacrificed for practicality.

"There's a tendency when you're young for the older people to assume you haven't the know-how to do the job," he says. "But the people who hired me here didn't do that. They knew I'd be around and just listen."

"I'm here to use my judgment and intelligence in the best possible way."

Faxon is a member of the educational committee. He is 25 years old and a junior at Michigan State University, studying for a Ph.D. in sociology. He is unmarried and lives with his parents in Detroit. Faxon has been teaching school in Detroit and has been a delegate as the convention delegate.

Since the convention opened last fall, Faxon has made 49 speeches, covering all areas except the judiciary.

"The important thing is the drawing up of a sound, workable constitution for the state," he adds. "I can't see an extra week or two, it shouldn't make any difference."

Faxon is converted and lives with his parents in Detroit. He is a graduate of Wayne State University and has also been a research assistant at the University of Michigan.

He has been teaching school since he was in the 12th grade. He is teaching in a junior high and high school in Detroit. Faxon became interested in politics only recently.

"I became interested in the political side of things through contacts I made with local labor organizations and labor activities," he said.

"But I never realized how much I actually knew about it until I discovered what I thought I knew."

Faxon said he didn't plan to stay in politics.

"I've learned so much more about politics, though," he said. "It has been something you can't learn by just reading about it."

Faxon will remain teaching in high school.

"I suppose I could fit into something else, but I think I would find it enjoyable," he said. "It's as high school to me, that kind of situation."

Faxon's main outside interest is art. He has worked at painting considerably and was a member of several musical organizations in Detroit.

"The reason why I didn't vote for the proposal in front of me," Faxon said, "is because of the fundamental of public dollars for public purposes. I wasn't going to vote for it."

MONDAY, March 5, 1962

The crash of a military plane left the pilot, Capt. Bill Williams, dead. The plane, a B-57, which left from Walker Air Force Base in Mississippi, was carrying 11,000 hours of flying time, according to the Federal Aviation Agency. The crash was the worst civilian crash in the United States.

The worst civilian crash in the United States was the crash of an Air France super-constellation that crashed in the Pacific, May 28 of last year. The crash, which killed 129 in Japan, was the worst civilian crash involving an airliner.

In Europe, four of the passengers were children.

California Airways, in business only since December, is under investigation in the crash. A company official said the plane, a Constellation, had taken off for a test flight. Capt. Bill Williams, had been flying for 18 hours of flight time, including a trip with the Federal Aviation Agency.

Saucier Says

Rehabilitative Prisons
Better in the Long Run

By CAROLY TRAINS
of the State News Staff

Dr. Donald Saucier, prodigy of sociology and author of "The Corrective Process," has arrived at the University of Michigan for a three-week visit. Saucier is associated with the sociology department at Ohio State University and is currently working on a study of rehabilitation.

Although rehabilitative prisons have been in existence for some time, their effectiveness has been questioned. The purpose of rehabilitative prisons is to prepare prisoners to reintegrate into society upon release. However, some have argued that these prisons do not adequately prepare prisoners to live in society.

The United States has the largest prison population in the world, with over 1.5 million prisoners confinement. The cost of keeping a prisoner in prison is estimated to be around $30,000 per year. This high cost has led many practitioners to question the effectiveness of
rehabilitative prisons.

Saucier believes that rehabilitative prisons can be more effective if they focus on providing prisoners with skills and training that will help them find employment after release. He argues that prisoners should be given opportunities to work and learn while incarcerated, which will help them adapt to life outside of prison.

Saucier also emphasizes the importance of family and community support for prisoners. He believes that prisoners who have the support of their families and community are more likely to successfully reintegrate into society.

The trip to the Saginaw Steering Plant is one of the many events Saucier will participate in during his visit. Saucier's study of rehabilitative prisons is expected to contribute to the ongoing debate about the effectiveness of prison rehabilitation programs.
