Americans are slow in making changes. They're for the most part, complacent, thanks to an history of prosperity and political stability. They think their way of life is the best, and they are not inclined to alter the status quo, economically, politically or institutionally.

Once in a while, however, an incident occurs—a very conspicuous thing. Last February, for instance, Chinese students went out of their way to transform the status quo into a cause. Sometimes their expressions assume the color of national strikes, complete astonishment, supreme exaltation or righteous indignation.

The incident of the Sputnik in 1957 left Americans aghast. Those crude, barbaric Russians actually putted a space satellite! "How could this happen?" embarrassed Mr. Eisenhower asked. Ultimately, the Soviet space achievement led to a complete redesign of the American educational system. For decades people have been aware of the glories of the Anglosphere State education. But it took one momentous incident to bring the problem of the student body to the American public's eye.

Several weeks ago, millions of Americans viewing their television screens saw a man in the process of being killed. He wasn't riddled by bullets from Eltj Ness' revolver. He wasn't stabbed to death by an Apache Indian. This was the real thing. Two men were fighting for the Welte Remhol, Inc., at Madison Square Garden before 17,500 people, the largest audience in the nation's history.

In the twelfth round, Emile Griffith, who has twice been knocked down and is a contender in a professional career, towards a corner and proceeded to administer at least twenty clean punches to his head before referee Referee Cosgrove stopped the slaughter. While Griffith was being returned champion, the Cuban, Luis Rodriguez, had a similar experience.
