Hannah: Colleges Need Federal Support

This is the final of a four-part series, "Captured From U.S. News & World Report," an independent weekly news magazine and website dedicated to higher education. Copyright 1953, U.S. News & World Report, Inc.

The series' exclusive interviews, the national magazine's featured college writers, and the analysis of the U.S. News & World Report charted the national debate on college costs.

To the Editor:

In a recent issue of the Michigan State News, Professor Fred Levine, the University's President, writes: "We are living in a period of unparalleled material progress and it is essential that our education be kept in step with the times."

I agree. But I also believe that the cost of education has been rising at an alarming rate. The question is: What can be done to bring about a more equitable distribution of educational opportunities?

The solution to this problem is not simple. It requires a coordinated effort between the federal government and the private sector. The federal government can provide funding for research grants and scholarships, while the private sector can contribute by providing financial aid packages.

In conclusion, I urge all college students to consider the financial implications of their education and to take steps to ensure that they have the necessary resources to pursue their academic goals.

Letters To The Editor

The one in which there is some likelihood of a subsidy to handle the problem of selecting the students who are to receive it.

As the demands on universities become greater, there will be a tendency to put down on this expensive student who has put in four years of study.

The answer on most of these questions is "no." The only thing the university gets out of it is the "shame" on federal aid for college education.

Body Of War Veteran
Found 18 Years Later

MILLWARD, Mich. (AP) — The body of a World War II veteran who was killed in action and left behind in the South Pacific for 18 years was identified in Massachusetts.

On Feb. 17, 1944, a B-24 bomber which was assigned to a unit based in Australia crashed in the Solomon Islands, killing all 13 crewmen.

In addition to 20 service members on board, the plane was carrying a passenger and a pilot who were not part of the military operation.

The remains of the 18 men were later recovered by American soldiers in the Pacific Ocean.

The remains of the pilot, identified as Capt. John Johnson, were sent to the United States for identification.

The remains were found to be consistent with those of John Johnson, who was killed in action during the war.

John Johnson was 23 years old at the time of his death.

The remains were then sent to Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

A memorial service was held for John Johnson in Virginia in 1944.

Egyptian Revolt Sparked Arab Unity

By SOIL BROWN
Of The Detroit News

The Egyptian revolt following the assassination of President Gamal Abdel Nasser has sparked an Arab unity movement throughout the Middle East. The nationalist government of Prime Minister Mohammed Naguib has called for an emergency conference of Arab states to discuss the situation.

The revolt, which began on April 23, has been supported by the United Arab Republic, composed of Egypt and Syria, and has received widespread popular support in the region. The government has also received substantial aid from the Soviet Union.

The revolt is seen as a challenge to the dominance of the United States and Britain in the region, and has led to a reevaluation of the role of the United Nations in the Middle East.

Exchange Prof. Cites Long-Term Effects

Brown's analysis suggests that the Suez crisis had a lasting impact on the region, leading to a significant decline in trade and investment. He argues that the crisis had a negative effect on the economies of the Middle East, which were heavily dependent on trade with Europe and the United States.

The book is available for purchase at local bookstores and online retailers.
