To Study Eskimo Culture

Curator Heads For Arctic

By PAUL D. ADAMS
State News Staff Writer

By Paul D. Adams, curator of the University of Chicago's Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. The museum, has won the right to study Eskimo culture, beginning July 11, after a team of scientists has been chosen to carry out the work.

Dr. Maxwell said that the study in the Arctic is to be carried out by a team of scientists, including anthropologists, ethnographers, and archaeologists. The team will include members from the University of Chicago, the University of Michigan, the University of Minnesota, and the University of Wisconsin.

The study will focus on the culture of the Arctic, including its history, society, and economy. The team will also study the living conditions of the Eskimos, and their relationship with the environment.

Dr. Maxwell said that the study will be conducted in close cooperation with local communities and authorities, and that the results will be shared with the public to promote understanding and respect for the culture.

The study will take place in the Arctic, where conditions are harsh and living conditions are difficult. The team will have to adapt to the environment and work in challenging conditions.

Dr. Maxwell said that the study is important because it will help to preserve and protect the culture of the Arctic and its people. He said that the results of the study will be used to inform future policy and decision-making.

The study will be funded through a combination of public and private sources, including grants, donations, and partnerships with local communities.

Dr. Maxwell said that the team is ready to begin the study and is looking forward to working with the people in the Arctic to learn more about their culture and way of life.
Alumnus Breslin Returns
As Secretary of University

By CHARLES G. WELLS
Show News Staff Writer

The man who in his youth showed Michigan State as his calling place today serves as his secretary. Jack Breslin, secretary to the University president, has decided to return to his alma mater to become a member of the administration. His decision is a victory for the university, as Breslin was one of the few Michigan State students to graduate with his degree in 1946.

Breslin's decision was made after a careful consideration of his options. He had the opportunity to accept a position in the private sector, but he felt that his roots at Michigan State ran too deep to leave. Breslin's involvement in the university community goes beyond his role as a secretary, as he is also involved in various university committees and organizations.

While Breslin's decision may initially seem surprising, it is not without precedent. Many alumni have returned to their alma maters to serve in administrative roles, bringing a wealth of experience and knowledge to the university.

Breslin's return to Michigan State is a testament to the university's commitment to its alumni and its desire to bring back talented and dedicated individuals to serve in leadership positions.

What To Use Is Question
Elm Research Project

Editor's Note: This is the third in a series on a project in central Dutch elm disease.

By ERIC C. FISHER
Show News Staff Writer

The advisory committee on central Dutch elm disease is concerned about the growing threat of the disease to trees in our region. The committee has been working on a project to develop methods to control the disease and prevent its spread.

This project, which is funded by the state and federal governments, has received national attention. The committee has been working with university researchers and local experts to develop effective strategies to combat the disease.

The committee has been particularly focused on developing methods to control the disease in urban areas, where trees are closely spaced and the spread of the disease is more likely.

The committee's efforts have been successful, and the disease has been contained in several cases. However, the committee continues to monitor the situation and is always ready to adapt to new developments.

The committee's work has been recognized by the national and international communities, and it has received numerous awards for its efforts.

This project is a testament to the importance of collaboration between academia, industry, and government to address complex and pressing issues such as central Dutch elm disease.

College Expenses Hidden

The cost of going to college may be much higher than you've imagined.

Students arriving on campus for the first time this fall have discovered the cost of attending MSU is not as low as advertised in the catalogue.

The first thing they find out is that most dormitories charge a compulsory fee. After registration the student will have to pay $100 in addition to room and board. In MSU's big Ten. Most entering freshmen and transfer students are the only dormitories that charge this fee.

The survey showed these average expenditures: $85 for room and board, $85 for personal expenses, $5 for transportation, $44 for supplies and $10 for other expenses. This comes to about $145 per semester.
