A joint concert of the Congress of Strings and Festival Chorus conducted by Ralph Hunter will climax MSU's fourth annual Fine Arts Festival tonight at 8:15 p.m. in the Auditorium.

The show is the first in a series of three concerts by the Congress of Strings that will be presented by the Auditorium in the next few weeks. The other two concerts will be held on July 3 and July 4.

The Congress of Strings is composed of the finest musicians in the country, and the concerts have been planned to give the students of the city an opportunity to hear some of the world's greatest musicians in a friendly atmosphere.

The first concert of the series will be held on July 3, and the second on July 4. The concerts will be held in the auditorium of the University of Michigan, and will be presented by the Festival Chorus under the direction of Ralph Hunter.

The Congress of Strings has been invited to perform at the Festival Chorus concerts, and the students of the city have been looking forward to this opportunity for some time.

Researcher Sees Hope For Leukemia Cure Soon

By CHARLES S. WELLS
State News Staff Writer

A cure for leukemia may be found by medical researchers in the next six years, a Michigan State University professor of medicine said Tuesday.

"We may very well see a cure for leukemia in the next six years," Dr. Herman R. Goldberg, assistant professor of medicine, said in a talk to members of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

The cure may result from the continuing studies by Dr. William Conner and the Michigan State University research team which is uncovering new information about leukemia.

"I think we are getting closer and closer to finding a cure," Conner said. "We are making progress every day."
But 9th In Funds
State 3rd In Research Projects

By ERIC M. FILSON
State News-Press Writer

According to new figures published in the April, 1963 issue of the University of Illinois Research News, this year Michigan State University ranked ninth among 20 Big Ten universities in dollars spent on research.

However, MSU ranks third in the number of projects undertaken, only behind the University of Illinois and the University of Wisconsin. Illinois and the University of Wisconsin, with 1,800 projects, are far ahead of Michigan State which has 1,100 projects.

"The figures are not comparable," said Melvin E. Muelder, vice president of research and development. "The figures should mean the same, but each university utilizes different criteria for handling statistics. These figures are not likely to reflect accurately the number of projects under way, the number of researchers involved, or the significance of research being done. The figures are not intended to compare dollars with the significance of research being done. These figures mean that the nation's investment in research is being undertaken on this campus."

Muelder and staffs of the institutions they are comparing have been working hard to establish the number of projects under way, the number of researchers involved, and the significance of research being done. Michigan State has 1,100 projects, which probably will be updated in November, and it will be the same size as the number of projects under way, with some fluctuations.

"The figures do not mean that each university spends the same amount of money on research but, according to its own publications, money is being spent on research. The figures are not intended to compare dollars with the significance of research being done. These figures do not mean that the nation's investment in research is being undertaken on this campus."
