New Prof Doing Ag Research

Donald Persson, associate pro­fessor at Sweden's Royal College of Agriculture, recently joined the MSU agronomy engineering department.

Persson is teaching advanced courses in farm power and machinery.

He is also coordinating research in soil strength and foundational research in agricultural engineering.

After graduation from the Jans­berg College of Agricultural in 1946, Persson earned his master's degree from Columbia College of Technology in Gothenburg.

He came to the United States on a Kellogg fellowship which enabled him to earn his doctorate at MSU in 1960.

At that time he made study of ways to improve tractor con­struction and performance.

Recently, he returned to Sweden and continued his work with traction and tractor construction.

He came to the United States again because he felt a Swedish agronomic society needed an agricultural engineering research program in his field.

He chose MSU because of its location. It is one of the best schools in the United States for agricultural engineering and has an active research program in that field.

The program has already received $14,500 grant from the American Society of Agricultural Engineers.

Professor of agriculture; Charles P. Jamieson, assistant professor of agriculture; Charles F. Pickel, associate professor of speech; Charles P. Jamieson, assistant professor of psychology, Charles P. Pickel, associate professor of speech and Donald L. Grummon, director of the Counseling Center.
