The rumors are based on the fact that Wilkinson has been absent from work for three days.

The rumors are not likely to be true, according to sources close to the administration.

The university administration has denied reports that Wilkinson will be dismissed.

Color Them Embarrassed

Maybe Beaumont Tower needed a coat of paint over those old bricks and gray concrete.

Maybe Sparty looks better than brown.

At least some people thought physical plant was lying down on the job and that some of the campus buildings needed redoing.

The trouble was that they picked a poor time to do their remodeling.

The light was at 1 a.m. and high quality painting is impossible in the moonlight.

The campus decorators weren't too surprised. They had the exterior decorators redo their work, and thought Sparty looked fine in the daylight.

The men will paint the dorms in the daytime. They will paint the brown dorms in the daytime. They will paint the white dorms in the daytime. They will paint the students in the daylight.

Good Lecture—Small Crowd

The University was host to a distinguished guest from Germany this week. Appearing as first guest speaker in this year's Lecture Concert series, Waldemar Besson of the University of Erlangen-Nuremberg will talk on the Revolutions of 1968.

Besson indicated that the Christian Democratic Party, led by its protagonist, Anglosaxon faction will choose to sail with the moderate states.

His reasons were basically twofold. First, Gaullist France is a politically unstable France; second, Germany favors a relaxation of tensions, and it is the United States who has provided the leadership in this field.

With such an excellent speaker and timely subject, the turnout of some 30 students was unfortunate, but not surprising.

Saturday afternoon on the football field the men of this University will determine this year's champions. The men will paint a football game --- they will paint a football game in the daylight.

Cyclists Face Needless Bumps

During the past years, the "far-seeing" University engineers have installed a network of bike paths to aid the rider in his constant fight against the four-wheeler competition for the roadway. The only problem is that these "far-sighted" planners neglected to consider how to ride a bicycle off a side-rack that terminates many of the bike paths.

At many street crossings, a cyclist has a choice of listening to the crunch of metal against cement or the front fender fails to clear the side-rack, picking up his burdens which have harnessed from the bike basket, and jouncing back up six inches on the other side of the street. On the other hand, he may dismount and dispute the problem manually.

Both maneuvers often leave the bicyclist wide-eyed in a heavy traffic, making him wish for the safety of the sidewalk when uncompromising motorists fail to yield the right of way.

For all the inconvenience and risk created, it would seem a small task to provide some sort of graduated descent from bike path to road at all bike path crossings.

New bike paths are fine, but after all the fuss over bicycle regulations, isn't it time cyclists got this small but needed service.

Between the objects Campus Club Conference of last fall, the Educational Development Project sponsored last winter, and the development of an organization last spring called the Basic Action Party, there has been a good deal of discussion regarding the place and responsibilities of the students, and academic party, here at Michigan State.

As chairman of the Basic Action Party, I consider this to be the present development, in the right of the presenting student body to itself, some of the issues which are more often raised in the context of student political party. The state that most specifically and relevantly to Michigan State.

First, we propose a greater degree of power, as well as responsibility. The criticism has been made that the student political party, under the criteria of student government, judiciary and other student organizations, constitute our means to recently and develop University students.

Part of the success of the great universities of the eastern United States lies in their ability to regard the student as an autonomous individual, to accept his leadership in this field. We feel that in the case of Michigan State, the University is being asked to be more, by being for many challenging, we propose a greater degree of power, to the student political party, Wolverines By A Point?

By DAVE GOOD
Michigan Daily Sports Editor

A prime day in a prime year—October 11, 1963. It was the day President Eisenhower made a historic trip to the University of Michigan. It was the day the Michigan State football team visited the Big House. It was the day that Michigan lost to Michigan State by a point.

The game was the most important game of the season for both teams. Michigan State was trying to keep their hopes alive for a Big Ten title, while Michigan was trying to avenge last year's loss to the Spartans.

Michigan State came out strong, scoring early in the first quarter. But Michigan fought back, scoring a touchdown late in the first quarter to tie the game.

The second half was a nail-biter, with both teams scoring in the third quarter. The game remained tied at 7-7 until the fourth quarter, when Michigan State scored a touchdown late to take the lead.

Michigan State was not able to hold onto the lead, however, as Michigan scored a field goal to tie the game back up. The last minute of the game saw both teams trying to score a winning touchdown.

Michigan State was able to get into the end zone with a few minutes left, but the extra point attempt was blocked by Michigan. The game ended in a 13-13 tie, the first tie in Michigan State history.

The tie was a huge disappointment for Michigan State, who had been hoping for a conference title. Michigan, on the other hand, was able to keep their hopes alive for a Big Ten title, and the game will be remembered as one of the most exciting in Michigan State history.
Halfbacks O.K., Mellinger Isn't

The man behind the mask Saturday afternoon at Michigan Stadium will be Wearling Lincoln. The popular right end will be wearing the mask to protect a fractured jaw which he sustained last week against Southern California.

The purpose of the mask is to reduce the pressure on the inner part of the jaw. The device resembles a catcher's mask and is fastened in position with tape. Lincoln has been working out with the team since Wednesday when he was through with face protection.

He has been placed in a concentrated diet during the past two days to help him regain the strength he has lost after getting hit in the face. The two-time letter-winner from South Bend, Indiana, was expected to be in shape for the Buckeyes, after missing the first two games of the season.

"I feel badly about it," next week's Daily Delight. "I do a great job, a good job, but I still have partial power in my injured jaw. If we had him, he could go deep in games.

"Thankfully his first appearance for the Spartans Saturday afternoon will be on that right end," had been his last appearance, 10 days ago, when the team was restricted to an early season without contact with the ball. The coach told the news media Tuesday that he expected to be in shape for the Buckeyes, after missing the first two games of the season.

U-M Holds Lead In 55 Meetings

The 51st meeting of the Michigan and Indiana teams will be held at Michigan Stadium Saturday, October 12th, 1:30 p.m. The game will be a sellout, with all available tickets sold.

The Michigan-Indiana series dates back to 1890, with the first meeting in Ann Arbor. The teams have met 55 times, with Michigan holding a 37-12-6 lead. The last meeting was in 1962, with Michigan winning 34-14.

Michigan State Builders, Fresh from a 41-0 win over Loyola, via College, return to the Spartan squad. The team will be led by co-captains Ron Rubick and Bob Chandler who moved up from the first two games of the season.

U-M Coach Bill Utley, who moved up from the first two games of the season, will be halfback Ron Rubick whose knee has kept him out of action since early last season.

In the past seven years, Michigan State has won three games against Indiana, with the win coming last year in the Big Ten Conference.

(1) Distinguished in their respective courses are the members of the two faculty teams that roar in and out of campus entrances. If a student thinks it must be kept alive by thoughtful study, prayer and, most of all, church attendance, he must turn into an evangelist. All too many students come to campus with the goal that one anthropologist termed "the riot's got to eat" (1). They are not made to consider more than money, clothing, and parties.
