Athletes Frequently Injured

Shoulder Easily Hurt

By Hugh J. Leach

J ust before the start of the Michigan State University hockey season, there was an unusual injury to a player. A shoulder separation. Three ligaments were torn. The ligaments are the part of the shoulder joint that hold it together. The separation was caused by a kick to the shoulder. The player was taken off the ice and was out for the rest of the season.

Dr. James J. Craig, head of the Michigan State University Department of Physical Therapy, explained what happened. "The player was playing hockey and was hit in the shoulder by an opponent. When the shoulder ligaments are torn, it is necessary to return to the ice. Re-training is necessary to return to the sport."

The two ligaments, one at the back of the shoulder and one at the front, are necessary to return to the sport. The third ligament, between the scapula and the clavicle, is also necessary. The third ligament is torn when the shoulder is hit by an opponent.

Dr. Craig said that the player is returning to the ice and is training accordingly. The player will be able to return to the ice in a few weeks.
