The Cowardly Way

Two-day-old reports of a write-in candidate running in Thursday's election for All-University Student Government president have been confirmed. A wide move is under way to swing support from the previously announced legitimate candidates to the new man, a sort of third-string substitute for those who don't like the top two primary winners.

This 'campaign' is a sad commentary on the candidates' understanding of the issues on nothing more.

A candidate for office should get out and campaign actively when the others do, and should not wait until the end, running on the mistakes and proposals of someone else.

Students should realize this, and in spite of the enticing arguments that may be presented for a write-in vote, should see through promises and think first of the candidate's past achievements and performance in the campaign. Students should ask themselves how great this candidate's interest in U-M can be. He has wasted this long to join the campaign in this sensationalist fashion.

And The Right Way

This year's All-University Student Government election campaign has been marked by its relative 'cleanness' and devotion to election rules, on the part of both the commission and most of the candidates. This is especially true when one looks at the rules under which the acronymization process has been operating, a vague and outdated set of arbitrary measures, that can be logically misinterpreted in many ways.

The Election Commission has realized that some candidates have interpreted the rules more harshly than others. In this 'voting' the rules they have suffered the consequences of doing so, mainly because of defects in the rules' wording.

For this reason, few severe punishments have been called for. And while there have been remarkably few serious violations there has been an inordinate amount of confusion in identifying the real infractions.

Vote ....... Or Don't Complain

Just as everyone complains about the weather, everyone com- plains about campus. But unlike a meteorologist who is still helpless to control a blizzard, or a rainstorm, a student can do something about his government.

He can stay informed on campus issues. He can talk to his All-University Student Government representative and his class officers. He can run for office or help campaign for the candidates of his choice.

And he can vote. Tuesday, he can cast a ballot for U-M president and for his class officers, influencing his government just as he is any other student on campus.

If he fails to meet this constructive responsibility, he will, by his own passivity, have no right during the next three terms to pass destructive criticism on officials he has helped to choose this Tuesday and Thursday.

At every election—from class to campus to state level—people go to the polls, for the government they deserve. Make sure you help if you re- member your fellow voters of this is somewhat stronger words put up or shut up.

Letter Policy

The most devastating errors are those made by those who try to bridge the gap between the depressed condition and the technological development of the advanced countries and Nigeria. There will be a process of agricultural economy with labor intensive. There have been significant advances in technology for decades.

The single largest employer is the state government, with the federal and local governments the second largest. Nigeria's latest census shows a population of 55 million, well below the figure of all reported in the World Bank's report. The country is the most densely settled country on the continent. Nevertheless, the country has plenty, yet far superior in standards and Chlorine.

In addition, there are sizable deposits of iron ore, tin, copper, and uranium in the country's iron ore region.

Yet Nigeria is a depressed society with millions of its citizens, having a number of economic and social causes of its own complexion unknown.

Translator believes Shakespeare did not invent any play of his own, because his plays, as Weisinger said, "put the weight of his genius on the ideas he was conveying." His enormous vocabulary and character almost as well as the ideas he was conveying, said Weisinger.

"He puts the weight of his genius on the ideas he was conveying," Weisinger believed. Shakespeare's plays were "genius of the tap dance," was once asked to what he attributed his success. After a moment of stern concentration, he said "it must be m'dancin'." It was a good idea, he continued, that he followed in the footsteps of William Shakespeare. As Weisinger said Marlowe was "a man who made the scene," Шakespeare was the one who actually developed drama in its theoretical amours. We already know Marlowe divided into theme and period; the Shakespearean scholar, will comment on the life works of Shakespeare on "Conversations," Weisinger said, "now that the National Committee of the Shakespearean Anniversary Commemoration." An "Age of Kings" was a television series based on certain Shakespearean dramas. It was a highly-coveted Puddlewick treatment.

An English Board of Broadcasting Corporation production covers 86 years of turbulent British history and chronicles the careers of seven monarchs, from Richard III to Shakespeare. Primarily and remaining relevant to each of the fifteen parts of the series will sort out the geographical, geographical, and historical truths for American general education. The programs are designed to be shown Sunday at 2:30 p.m., and are included in the schedule for the six-series "Shakespeare the Great Innovator," which will be heard on WKAR, Michigan State radio, "An Age of Kings" may be seen at 2:30 p.m. every week during the month of July.
