Center Adds 2 Professors

Richardson, Swartz Join Africa Staff

By CHARLES C. MEILLS

The MBI African Studies Center will continue to expand its studies next fall term.

In the current year, the MBI African Studies Center is planning to recruit two additional scholars, one to work in the South Highlands Province of Tanganyika, and recently completed 18 months of field work in the South Highlands Province.

The additional scholars will be part of the program's effort to expand the African Studies Center's work in the African region.

The Center has been active in conducting research and teaching in the African region for several years, and has established a strong reputation for its contributions to the field of African Studies.

The addition of these new scholars will further enhance the Center's ability to conduct high-quality research and provide meaningful education in the African region.

International Club

To Hold Festival

The International Club will hold a festival to celebrate the cultural diversity of its members.

The festival will feature performances by members from different countries, showcasing their unique cultures and traditions.

The International Club is a diverse and inclusive group, and this festival will provide an opportunity for members to share their cultural heritage with others.

The festival will be held on campus and open to the public.

Reds Drugged Aides

In Odessa, U.S.S.

WASHINGTON  - The American embassy in Moscow reported that two Soviet military attaches were found dead in Odessa, and the Soviet authorities are investigating.

The attaches were found in a hotel room, and the cause of death is under investigation.

The embassy has no information on the identities of the attaches or the cause of death.

April Job Increase

Over Predictions

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Labor Department said the rate of job creation in April was lower than expected, with only 43,000 new jobs created, compared to the 140,000 expected.

The department's report this week was consistent with the lower-than-expected job growth seen in recent weeks.

The report is likely to fuel concerns among economists about the strength of the U.S. economy and its ability to generate sustained job growth.

The nation's largest employer, Federal Express, said it would be shutting down a few facilities, citing a slowdown in the economy.

The job cuts are expected to affect several thousand employees, including workers at the company's Memphis, Tennessee, hub.

The company said it would be laying off an unspecified number of workers in various locations, including its Memphis facility, where it has been experiencing a decline in business.

The company did not provide specific numbers of layoffs, but said it was responding to changes in the market.

The job cuts come as the U.S. economy continues to struggle with high unemployment and slow growth.

The Labor Department's report this week showed that the unemployment rate remained at 9.9 percent, unchanged from the previous month.

The report also showed that the number of people out of work for 27 weeks or more rose to 3.3 million, up from 3.2 million in March.

The department said that the number of people unemployed for 27 weeks or more is still well above the levels seen in previous recessions.

The report comes amid growing concerns about the economy's prospects, with many economists warning that the recovery is not yet complete and that more stimulus measures may be needed.

The government has already taken steps to boost the economy, including a $787 billion stimulus package passed in February.

But some economists say that more action is needed to spur growth and create jobs.

The Labor Department's report this week is likely to fuel those concerns, as it shows that the jobless rate remains high and that the number of long-term unemployed is still rising.

The report is expected to be a major factor in the economic debate in the coming days, with many policymakers calling for additional stimulus measures.

But others argue that more spending is needed to prevent a relapse into recession.

The report is likely to spark a new round of debate over the best way to boost the economy, with some calling for tax cuts and others favoring increased spending.

Action At Last

The East Lansing Human Relations Commission has made its first significant move toward combating racial discrimination Wednesday in recommending an open housing ordinance to "protect and preserve and aid in the enforcement of the citizens' right to live in the City of East Lansing.

If the commission's recommendation is followed, the City Council will adopt a law with punitive measures for those who discriminate in real estate transactions on the basis of race or creed.

The City Attorney has been asked to begin drafting an ordinance.

In the meantime, the commission has recommended that the City Council express its disapproval of housing discrimination.

The resolution sets up a procedure for handling complaints and empowers the human relations commission to investigate possible cases of discrimination.

It emphasizes the value of mediation and conciliation.

However, it has no legal provision for enforcing operating policies.

Several commission members who approved the resolution abstained from voting on the ordinance. A. K.瑶, an attorney, said he would rather promote better human relations without the "iron fist of the state."

This is an idealistic but unrealistic view.

As Mrs. Mahlon S. Sharp, another commission member, said: "Legal action is the last resort when mediation has failed. Legislation is sometimes needed to bring about desirable behavior."

In other words, laws are necessary when people won't listen to reason.

The resolution is a step in the right direction, but it is not substitute for a firm legal ordinance.

Sense, Not Censorship

The Oakland University Observer has struck another blow in the long fight for freedom of the press. Dr. C. L. Marcus, university president, canceled an editorial charging that Varner had prevented a "sex" story from being printed.

Varner charged the editor, Wolf Metzger, with "irresponsible journalism" and fired him. Metzger charged censorship and said:

"I took the position that we are not setting up a medium for the university and should be free to publish news, even if it is not always in the university's interest."

Sorry, Mr. Metzger, you are wrong.

The university is the publisher of your campus paper, just as Michigan State is the publisher of this paper.

A publisher of a news paper, be it campus or county centered, has the right to say what goes in it to print and what its readers like.

Like it or not a college newspaper can operate as a public relations organ for its university. Despite disclaimers and notices that the "views of student editors do not necessarily reflect university official opinion," readers tend to believe that the two groups are closely related.

A college newspaper which displays a high degree of responsibility can operate without administration censorship.

Some college papers can effectively publish what they want, without being suspended or having editors fired.

We don't think that's news, and so do the better college papers all over the nation.

Legislature Finally Sees

The state legislature, following up its forward-thinking passing of Gov. Romney's record college budget, has approve the $9.000 property tax exemption for off-campus student housing.

This is another encouragement sign that legislators are awakening to the actual situation of colleges and college students.

"Profiles Of Culture"

Tomorrow the International Club will host the "Profiles of Culture," the 20th annual International Festival.

For those who attend the festival, these countries can be seen more than a newspaper headline, and the foreign students, all too often overlooked by American students wrapped up in life between Grand River and Mt. Hope Avenue--can gain real identities.

"I'm pleased that the legislature has realized the financial plight of the students," William T. Stimson, chairman of the off-campus anti-tax committee, said.

We are even more pleased that the legislature has begun acting in accordance with a realistic understanding of life to college, for both students and faculty.

The five finalists shown in the previous-mentioned Ugliest Greek contest were announced Tuesday.

Men’s Glee Club Seeks Members **

Men’s only glee club, the Singing Statesmen, is looking for additional members, director Loren Jones disclosed Wednesday.

“We wish to increase our membership, from the previous number of 45-50 to approximately 90,” Jones said. “We have very strictly limited membership, but we mean to expand this number as soon as possible, but I find this is proportional to our large turnover between terms.”

Those wishing to join should contact Jones, 355-7643.

Prof To Study Indian Theatre

Farley P. Richardson, assistant instructor in speech, was awarded a United States Fulbright Grant under the Fulbright-Hays Act to study English-speaking theatre in India.

Richardson will examine the structure, emphasis, and significance of contemporary Englishlanguage theatre in India. This study marks the first American doctoral dissertation and research on contemporary Indian theatre.

Richardson will travel to India, including Delhi, Calcutta, and Madras. He will work closely with the National School of Drama in New Delhi and will interview, Professor Mason, deputy-director general of All India Radio.

Combs, Bands In Jazz Show

Several of the music faculty members participate in the show, which is sponsored by Student Activities and the MSU Jazz Band. The big band will perform some of the arrangements of students in the Department of Music that are on a recording, "Green Dolphin Street." The band will also feature a big band with the MSU Jazz Band. The show will be held Saturday night at 8 p.m. in the Auditorium.

Dr. Prescott Honored For Work With Algae

A professor of zoology who has been in the Marine Biology Laboratory for 10 years, Dr. James M. Prescott, has been honored with a special award in recognition of his contributions to the study of marine algae. The award, given by the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, is one of the most important in the field of marine biology.

Engineering Council To Hold All-University Dinner Dance

The Engineering Ball, an all-University dinner dance, will be held Friday, May 9, in the Union Ballroom. The theme of the evening will be the history of the University, and the banquet will be followed by a dance featuring the MSU Jazz Band. The Council of Engineering Councils will sponsor the event, and the MSU Foundation will provide the funds.

Service 50 Years Old

The Michigan Cooperative Extension Service was established in 1894 and has been in continuous operation for 50 years. It is the oldest such service in the United States and has been responsible for many significant advances in agriculture, home economics, and rural development.

Successor Services

The Ralston Farm, founded by a professor of Agriculture sent two years ago by the Morrill grant, is today of the greatest benefit to the United States Department of Agriculture, and owes its success to the old college throughout the land and to the students in the local communities.

The Michigan Cooperative Extension Service, 1894-1944

The Cooperative Extension Service is performing a unique function in the educational programs and activities of the University. These include health education, family living, and youth education in all parts of the state. The Service is supported by a federal grant administered by nearly 200 representatives in every county.

Large Taxidermy Calls for Sculptor

A desire to construct life-size human figures led a New York art student into a career as a museum sculptor, painter, and taxidermist. Among the hundreds of animals he has made into one-piece African antelopes, a 30-foot holy whale, a tiger shark, and a 10-foot long Komodo dragon. His work has been exhibited at the American Museum of Natural History in New York, and at the National Museum of Natural History in Chicago. He is receiving growing recognition for his skill in the art of taxidermy, specifically in animal sculptures.

"The large taxidermy specimens are not cured and are not ready for display until they are 30 years old, but are ready to be mounted on a pedestal when they are 30 years old." - John W. Hope, sculptor

State Sees $37 Million Surplus

Spend $629 Million

The expected general fund spending for the state's fiscal year will still exceed its budget by $21 million, according to State Comptroller Glenn S. Moe. The Moe said that the state's actual spending for the fiscal year ended June 30 will be $629 million more than the budget, or $21 million more than the spending level projected in the state's budget.

The reason for the discrepancy was due to the state's increased spending on education and social services.

The Moe said that the state's spending for education and social services had increased by $21 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe also said that the state's spending for health and human services had increased by $10 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for public safety and public welfare had increased by $8 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for natural resources and environmental protection had increased by $7 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for transportation had increased by $5 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for corrections and rehabilitation had increased by $4 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for economic development and community development had increased by $3 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for public works and development had increased by $2 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for public utilities and communications had increased by $1 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

The Moe said that the state's spending for libraries and archives had increased by $1 million more than the state's budget for those programs.

History Recorded In State Symbols

The Michigan State Legislature has done a splendid job of preserving the state's history and symbolism through its symbols and historic buildings. The state flag, adopted by the legislature in 1856, contains the Great Seal of the State of Michigan, which is a shield with a green eagle on a red field. The eagle is perched on a mountain, with wings Spread and talons gripping a shield. The shield bears the words "Speramus melius actuaris," which is Latin for "We hope for better acts.

The state seal, adopted in 1835, features a shield with a shield between moose, standing on their hind legs, facing each other and supporting a shield. Above the shield is the word "State." The emblem of Michigan's official bird, the osprey, is also depicted on the seal.

In addition to the flag and seal, Michigan has a state song, "Hail to Michigan," which was adopted in 1919. The song's melody was created by Corliss Arnold, director of music at the Peoples Church in Grand Rapids.

In conclusion, the Michigan State Legislature has done a remarkable job of preserving the state's history through its symbols, buildings, and historic landmarks. These symbols and landmarks serve as a reminder of Michigan's rich history and continues to inspire future generations.

Singers Present Concert Sunday

The Michigan State University Choral Society will present a spring concert on Sunday, May 8, at 8:15 p.m. in the People's Church in Grand Rapids. The concert will feature a variety of vocal works, including spirituals, songs, and arias by prominent composers such as Verdi, Bizet, and Mozart.

Open Housing Law

The Michigan State University Housing Authority has adopted a new open housing policy that will be effective at the beginning of the fall semester. The policy will prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, or disability.

Ecological Activity Justifies Optimism

The Michigan State University Biology Department has conducted a study that suggests there may be an increase in the number of ecological activities on campus. The study found that students who participate in ecological activities tend to have a greater interest in environmental issues and are more likely to make environmentally friendly choices.

Economic Activity Justifies Optimism

Although economic activity may appear to be declining, there are several factors that suggest that the economy is still healthy. First, consumer spending remains strong, which indicates that people are still willing to spend money. Second, businesses are still investing in new technologies, which suggests that they believe in future growth.

In conclusion, while there may be some signs of economic difficulty, there are also reasons to be optimistic about the future. It is important to continue to monitor economic indicators and to take action to address any problems that arise.
