In Fatality

n December, the St. Cloud Register-Item, (St.
Cool, Minnesota, evening paper) announced its duction of a new newspaper.

The first edition of the paper was published on November 12, 1941, and it was described as "the newspaper of the future." The paper featured local news, sports, and entertainment, as well as coverage of world events.

Some notable articles from the first edition include an article on the recent political elections, a feature on local musicians, and a review of the latest movie releases.

Despite its early success, the paper faced challenges in the years that followed, including financial difficulties and competition from other local publications.

In the late 1950s, the newspaper was acquired by a larger publishing company, and it underwent several name changes and miscellaneous ownership changes.

The paper was finally closed in the mid-1970s, marking the end of an era for local news and entertainment.
EDITORIALS
The State Of The Union

The State of the Union address which President Johnson presented to the nation Monday night was a digest of attitudes, problems and methods of the President and the nation as 1965 gets under way.

For the first time in years, a political leader responsible to the people he serves, Johnson managed in his speech to synthesize popular expectations of government into what is politically possible and practical, and his own views of his office and of government.

As a result, the speech Monday was significant mainly for the cross-roads of the Congress in 1965 of the federal government in both domestic and foreign policy.

Johnson's legislative proposals, outlined in the speech and to be revealed in more detail in special messages to Congress this month, deviate much from Johnson himself as from his understanding of the needs and wishes of the people of the country at this time.

The legislative proposals presented as the basis for moving the United States toward a "Great Society" contain little that has not been said before. Moreover, Johnson will face many ideas that have been talked about for long time, and as a reflection of the ideals and problems of the United States in a technological age.

Some of the proposals—medical care for the aged, greater federal aid for education, increased health programs and public services —are long overdue.

Johnson appears to anticipate a landslide victory over Barry Goldwater as a public demand for such programs.

Others are more daring proposals, also called from the volumes of material written about the lack of the federal government's more effective action and its failure to perform the functions it was organized to perform.

Johnson's caution and his understanding of the United States as a technological age, it is the tendency to ignore the individual in favor of the majority.

A Ford in Our Future

The Grant Rapids congressman and former University of Michigan football star, is now beginning his fifth term in Washington. He has received increasingly important committee posts and assignments in the House, including that of Warren Commission which investigated the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

He was considered a contender for the Republican nomination on the basis of his re-election to the House in 1964 by a strong majority. Ford's ability to unseat Hallock, who held the post of Republican House leader for six years, as head of Michigan Republicans is all the more significant following the broad defeat of Republicans in the November election.

He is a conservative on many domestic issues, but considers himself a realistic internationalist in foreign affairs. Ford is an example of the type of politician who can modify and accommodate his views to meet particular needs and in this, unlike his predecessor leader of a rebuilding party, Republicans must examine and perhaps modify their basic assumptions in party strategy in the future.

Bible's Value Diminished

By David D. McFarland

Editor's Note: David D. McFarland is a graduate student in philosophy and theology at Princeton University.

I am grateful for saving a missive (Dec. 15) in which you gave support to the part of your speech dealing with the nature of prophecy. I see no objection to your views as long as you confine them to the Bible. The Bible is not the only book which has had similar prophecies...I am not concerned that you believe the Bible is a..."Bible's inerrancy as a 'Bible of facts', as some 'Bible' by Mr. Reginald Dickson in "The Farmer's Campfire" column of Feb. 12, 1964.

Junior College Conferences Planned

Conference Room, Michigan Community College, will hold a one-day conference of the National Association of Community College Administrators, Thursday, Feb. 25. The conference is sponsored by the Michigan Community College Cooperative, a program of the Michigan Department of Education. The event is designed to promote the development of leadership abilities among those who are responsible for the administration of community colleges.

The conference will include sessions on a wide range of topics, including the role of the community college in the community, the responsibilities of community college presidents, and the challenges facing community college administrators.

New NCAA Roving Rule May Not Keep Fordy Still

By DUANE LANCASTER
State News Sports Writer

There was only one unexpected basketball story passed by the NCAA at its annual meeting, according to Michigan State coach Johnny Adair, who was part of the council. The rule passed was the so-called "middle window" which permits the players to score outside the floor width.

"We didn't think it would be like this," Adair said. "We thought the middle window would be a minor change." The Michigan State coach said that it would be easier to score against the Temple defense.
