Only Vanity Can Support MSU Medical School?

The American Medical Association and the American Association of Medical Colleges have done a professional and public service by delaying the opening of two medical schools by a year. MSU could have gestated with its plans for a 1965 opening of the medical school in spite of the AMCA's opposition. If the school had opened its second year of operation, AMCA officials might have decided to develop a more cooperative attitude toward meeting accreditation standards of the American Medical Association. The second year, the school opened.

It is quite true that MSU's two-year medical school will involve duplication of certain medical facilities at the University of Michigan and Wayne State University. However, this duplication is necessary if the State of Michigan is to have an adequate supply of doctors in the year 1970. Critics of the MSU medical school fail to remember that fact that since the College of Human Medicine at the University of Michigan opened its doors in October, 1946, new schools have opened at Wayne State University and the University of Kentucky. MSU simply has not had time to develop or to recruit faculty.

Moreover, since the College of Human Medicine opened its doors at the University of Michigan in 1946, the number of students in the College has doubled. The demand for medical education has increased so rapidly that the University of Michigan has opened a new College of Human Medicine now.

The Medical Council of the American Medical Association has recommended that the College of Human Medicine at the University of Michigan be accredited to offer the four-year professional degree in medicine. It has not been determined that the College of Human Medicine at the University of Michigan should be accredited to offer the four-year professional degree in medicine.

In the meantime, the College has been awarded the four-year professional degree in medicine by the state of Michigan. It is not that there is an oversupply of doctors, but that there are already adequate facilities for training many more doctors.

The University of Michigan and Wayne State University are adversely affected by the opening of the new medical schools. They do not have the facilities and the buildings to train more doctors.

Spartan Cagers Stumble In Big 10 Opener

85-78 Loss To Iowa Reflects Soph’s Loss

By DUANE LANCAS TER
State News Sports Writer

Despite being one-man down, the Spartans managed the same thing they have been doing all season long—defeat. And just like that, it's over. Michigan, 85-78, in front of a crowd of 13,762 at the Michigan State Fairgrounds. The Spartans were initially downed by the loss of a player, then later by the loss of a game. It was a tough day for the Spartans, but they managed to keep their heads up and fight until the end. The loss of a key player had a significant impact on the game, as the team struggled to keep up with the high-scoring Hawkeyes. However, the loss was not all bad news—there were a few bright spots throughout the game, including some impressive individual performances. Overall, it was a disappointing end to the Big 10 opener for the Spartans, but they remain undeterred and ready to tackle the next challenge. Photo by Tom Pappaschi.

Great Lakes shippers and Chicago readers attracted our eye to the Sunday Chicago Tribune’s big headline: "A Hamburger for 5000 Dollars a Piece." And, as usual, we had a conductor with narrow shoulders from whom we couldn’t tell exactly how far it was to that station.

Every morning, seven days a week, over the radio, February 23rd, 1965 was the University of Chicago Track Club. 34 little boys, 4 and 5 years old, stood at the starting line of their own little race course. They were the first in line, the only line. They raced to the front, the last, and then back again. A race for the little ones.

The end or the beginning? In the case of freshman trackman Steve Budlosky, it’s the latter. The Michigan State University student has shocked the nation with a performance that is sure to make him a household name.

tail Topic of Contrast

The work of Mark Twain and D. H. Lawrence continues to be celebrated in the context of the American Renaissance in literature. Both authors contributed significantly to the development of American literature, with Twain focusing on satire and social commentary, and Lawrence on experimenting with form and technique. Their works reflect the tumultuous period of the American 19th century, characterized by rapid industrialization, social change, and political upheaval.

Twain, with his humorous and biting wit, explored the foibles of human nature and society. His works, such as "The Adventures of Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," are filled with observations on the human condition. Lawrence, on the other hand, was more concerned with the evolution of the individual and the role of sexuality in the larger context of society. His "Sons and Lovers" and "Women in Love" are often cited as groundbreaking works in the development of modernist literature.

Despite their different approaches, both authors remain relevant today as they continue to challenge readers to think critically about society and its values.
