Teachers Discuss Viet Nam

BY LINDA BOYLE

Editor's Note: This is the first part of a two-part series.

When asked the U.S. to send more men into the Viet Nam war, Rep. John Dingell, D-Dearborn, said recently that the country is now being "waged not against foreign enemies, but against itself.

Dingell was speaking before the Michigan State University Faculty, who were asked by the administration to form a committee to study and comment on the Viet Nam issue.

The committee, which included representatives from all of the university's faculties, met for several weeks to discuss the implications of the war.

The committee's report was presented to the administration last week, and it is expected to be made public soon.

The committee's findings have been controversial, with some faculty members calling for more action to end the war, while others have argued that the university should stay out of politics.

Art Of Kremlinology

The art of Kremlinology, or the study of Russian politics and society, was the topic of a meeting held recently. Several experts in the field discussed various aspects of the Soviet system, focusing on the dynamics of power and influence within the communist government. The meeting was organized to provide insights into the workings of the Soviet political system and its impact on international affairs.

Edward Starr, a prominent Soviet analyst, emphasized the importance of understanding the historical context of Russian politics. He highlighted the role of the Communist Party and the significance of the current leadership under President Gorbachev. Starr argued that Kremlinology is not just about predicting future events but also about understanding the past.

The discussion also covered the significance of recent economic reforms and their implications for the future of the Soviet economy. The experts agreed that these reforms could potentially lead to increased private enterprise and a more market-oriented economy.

In conclusion, the meeting provided a comprehensive overview of the current state of Kremlinology and its relevance for understanding contemporary Russian politics. The experts concluded that the study of Soviet politics is crucial for anyone interested in global affairs and the future of Eastern Europe.
