Saugetuck Police Nab 89

The village of Saugetuck, Michigan, has been the scene of several crimes involving young people. On the morning of July 25, the village police were called to investigate a report of a break-in at the Saugetuck Country Club.

When they arrived, they found a group of young people, including several members of the Saugetuck High School football team, breaking into the club's golf cart shed. The police arrested the young people and charged them with burglary.

Saugetuck Police Chief John Miller said the break-in was the latest in a series of crimes involving young people in the village. "We've had several reports of break-ins at local businesses and homes," Miller said. "We're really concerned about this trend and we're doing everything we can to catch these young people and put them away."

A Tragic Lesson

There is a lesson to be learned from the display of Saturday morning in which four MSU students were killed in a white riot while returning from a public meeting to an extended curfew. The display went beyond the缨ow which must be felt for the family and friends of four young people lost in an attempt to achieve the fulfillment of their lives.

The four died in a car they turned on M-78 and Abbott Road, eight minutes before the 2 a.m. curfew went into effect. The white rioters, far earlier in the evening, and presumably had lost track of the hour, confronted them shortly before the deadline.

As hundreds of other MSU students left the campus hurriedly to avoid the trouble and embarrassment of missing curfew, it was not necessary to moralize on the consequences of their hurried handling in those few cases. There was no worse danger than to those who were largely innocent, but who saw themselves as the assailants.

The idea that avoiding late minutes part of the night, which took them back to the dorm on time is one of the least rational outgrowths of the democratic disciplinary system. Yet many students complained of spare no trouble and no danger to get back on time.

Clarity, there is something out of place in such a system of released, and the recent crisis brings the lesson with horror. Surely, students should not feel free meeting curfew is living their risks, or the purpose of curfews—to keep women students safe and healthy their behavior reasonable and proper—is quickly lost.

In the past three years, seven of the nine persons who have died in automobile accidents near the University have been victims of curfew-cut rushes.

Such deaths should point out to us not only that careful non-reasoning driving is imperative, but also that reasonable attitudes toward disciplinary rules are needed.

The rules should appear as substantial as the discipline nor the discipliner caught up in making them work. The need for leniency or relaxation may be in order in situations where the curfew becomes, literarily, a question of life and death.
