Schools Study Agriculture Aid

The MSU project is not affiliated with the National Association of State Colleges and Universities and operates independent of the Federal government.

In addition to assessing non-academic and extracurricular activities, the study will also explore the effect of race on fraternity recruitment. The study will take place over a three-year period, with the first year being spent on identifying the characteristics of students who are interested in joining fraternities. The second year will involve surveying fraternity members to gain a deeper understanding of the experiences and attitudes of fraternity members. The third year will focus on following up with members to assess the long-term impact of their fraternity experiences.

The study will involve both students in fraternity-related activities and non-fraternity members to provide a comprehensive view of the fraternity experience. The data collected will be used to inform recommendations for improving the fraternity experience and promoting diversity and inclusion within fraternity organizations.

The study is expected to result in a better understanding of the role of fraternities in higher education and to provide insights for improving the fraternity experience for all students. The findings of the study will be disseminated through publications, presentations, and educational workshops to promote diversity and inclusion within fraternity organizations.

More Dissent Ahead
For Public Colleges

In his speech to the American College of Harley, President Donald H. Bevan made a point that many students and administrators thought did not apply to them. The assistant to MSU President Donald H. Bevan predicted that America's colleges and universities will become centers of controversy. In the change will be centered in the way the administrators think of the "myth they used to tell.

He indicated that there was little enthusiasm for any policy that would be the败 main of the direction the college was being made there. However, he indicated that there will be some involved in student questions and demonstrations.

"There is evidence that our colleges and universities are becoming centers of opposition and disorder, and consequently targets of social criticism, to a greater extent than we have even known," he said.

Universities, he indicated, will be increasingly involved with problems like race relations, the plight of the student underprivileged, poverty and crime. As the problems have become more pressing, he said, universities have started to use the social system by making public statements. This is one form of controversy.

However, if picketing were from the viewpoint of student organizations, American college administrations would not be so swa.

But how does one tell a conservative student what political controversy is when the whole student body is actively supporting what he considers arbitrary and dictatorial.

The American college is going to become active in influencing our political decisions. It is going to become more controversial because it is going to take some unpopular decisions. Sometimes these stands are going to be against those who vote their budgets and this is where the friction will come.

If Bevan is any measure of the AUC administration's thinking, active, this viewpoint is significant. What else do the needs of Michigan State recognize, they will be involved in the sort of controversy, but it appears they stand ready to meet this challenge. They are the kind of men who will stand ready to meet this challenge.

Professor G. W. J. locomotive, who also teaches students and in social sciences, said that his students and himself are becoming more active in influencing our political decisions. They are the kind of men who will stand ready to meet this challenge.

Amid complaints about the vigor of the American college, James H. Denison made a point that CRM would rather not think about.

He indicated that there was little enthusiasm for any policy that would be the main of the direction the college was being made there. However, he indicated that there will be some involved in student questions and demonstrations.

8 Join Symposium Today On Politics

A workshop on political caucusing began Monday in an attempt to interest students in the political process. It is the second in a series of three workshops sponsored by Jerry St. Andrews, student president of the Student Senate, and his group, the Democratic caucus.

Eight Michigan political leaders are participating in the workshop, which will be held Thursday and Friday. They will present their views on the topics of the day, with an emphasis on issues that affect Michigan.

Today's topic, "Campaigning at the Local Level," will feature A. LeRoy Baker, a Democratic congressman from Michigan's 11th District, and Jack L. Thomas, former mayor of Lansing. Both Baker and Thomas are known for their expertise in political strategy.

Tomorrow's session, "The National and International Scene," will include a speaker from the Michigan Democratic Party, who will discuss the role of the party in national politics.

The workshops are open to all students and will be held in the Student Senate Room, 241-250. Refreshments will be provided.
Retarded Children Need Home Situation In Early Life

By CAROL BELLAMER State News Staff Writer

Children need a home situation in their early life, with an MSU student as their caretaker, the University Relations Committee has established a University Relations Committee to send letters to departmental and community leaders, and generally should not be institutionalized, said Betty Ayub, director of the Department of Community and Special Education.

The committee, composed of one representative from each of the six departments of the University of Detroit, will be responsible for sending letters to the departmental and community leaders to inform them of the need for foster home care for mentally retarded children and the need for more community support for retarded children.

In the future, Jones suggested, the University Relations Committee should make better use of existing community services and, in turn, provide more specialized services to the community.

Swenson To Train New Administrators

Robert Swenson, president and dean of residence and enrollment of the College of Agriculture, was named one of 10 persons to participate in a new program to train college administrators. The program, known as the Summer Institute of Administration, will be held at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles.

Swenson, who has been a member of the University's faculty since 1933, was nominated for the program by President John A. Hannah. He is one of five named from U.S. Young University, a master's degree in soil chemistry from the University of Massachusetts and a doctor's degree in agricultural economics from Iowa State University.
