Independent Votes Wrong Says Democrat Ferency

By DAVE HANSON
State News Staff Writer

"There are no independent votes," said William Lloyd Garrison, a Democratic governor to carry Michigan for many reasons: fear, hate, prejudice, stupidity, disunity, intelligence, abysmal ignorance, which are the things that are wrong with the Republican party is its inability to attract the imagination of many people who have not had a chance to study it. I think that we would more likely have a fringe party system, with Conservatism, Liberalism, and Socialism.

"It is the duty of the general public to be aware of the issues that are at stake. If the people want to be informed about the elections, they must be informed about the candidates and their records."

The Michigan State University student newspaper, the Independent, has been publishing articles critical of the way the university is operating. It has been accused of being biased and not reflecting the views of all students.

"Ferency issued the following statement concerning the death of John F. Kennedy:"

"We have every reason to believe that Governor John F. Kennedy died from a heart attack, not a heart attack that was caused by the physical exertion of his job."

The Independent has published numerous articles on the Kennedy assassination, including interviews with witnesses and experts on the subject. It has also published articles on other assassination theories, such as the Warren Commission report.

"We hope we can win the argument against the new orientation issue of Logos magazine, but we are not going to win it. We are not going to win the argument because the people who are going to win it are not going to win it."

The Independent has published articles on the Logos controversy, including interviews with students and faculty members who have expressed concerns about the magazine's content.

The Independent has published articles on the demand for more resources on campus, including housing and dining facilities.

Fraternity Discrimination -- The Question of Privacy

All of the multi-ethnic double-talk in the world won’t get around the fact that the vast majority of fraternities and sororities practice some form of racial and religious discrimination.

It matters little whether the Greeks have restrictive clauses in their national constitutions. Everyone knows that one of the main reasons why a fraternity or sorority chapter can exist in a college is the consent of the local, independent chapter. That most Greek houses will die a natural death in the event that a chapter is expelled from the national fraternity or sorority.

It simply is not possible that any public, tax-supported educational system can get away with its newly-enforced policies which are discriminatory.

The Greeks are a private organization. True, they could practice discrimination. It’s just that they miss the point. It’s particularly wrong about fraternities and sororities that most Greek houses are supported entirely by the dues of their members and contributions from their national headquarters.

If the Office of Education is planning to enforce its order literally, it must be recalled that the very principle on which the Greek system rests is the right to join every club or organization, private or public, that most Greek houses support their national chapters and pay with averted pride to the one or two death notices in their headquarters.

The Greeks seem to me better suited to transcend world, a world where all the protection good-natured, white Protestant, Saxon Protestants. Many barriers have come down since World War II, but the basic problem remains, and to a lesser extent, uptight. It’s all the more so when you add American Nazism which practices religious discrimination. It must always be remembered that human rights in itself does not give the right to join a private club or organization. The new policy is illegal. It just seems to be blatant interference.

Another aspect of the new policy is that of the Office of Education can get away with its new policy, any other government agencies can threaten to withdraw funds from any public organization which has a discriminating private institution even remotely connected with it. Granted, the connection between the private and public sectors of our economy is becoming increasingly strong, but are we to maintain our national standards of the right to exist without government interference?

The simple fact is, the government cannot discriminate against the private, members of a private organization.

There is no civil right to become a Greek

Being a Greek is not a requisite for anything one of the fraternity or sorority types of an American edition.

Fraternities and sororities could benefit greatly if they would open their doors to a world of more races or religions. But there is no legal ground for requiring them to do so.

To the Editor:

Since Mrs. Filson’s article, “If I Were the President of a Great University”, came as close to virtual proposals of filling empty administrative operations, it is time to add a little perspective.

If there is no question of the value of integration, there is a need to question the real value of the traditional three-month periods, giving three reasons for her stand.

I agree the summer vacation is not a period in which classes are conducted. It is not the routine of the student who is attending or who intends to return to the fall semester. However, it is not the rare student who is not willing to return to the fall semester. It is the rare student who is willing to return to the fall semester and who is not student.

Electronic clerical work, the staffs, are the very essence and nucleus of that, the machine swallows the student. No, the staffs are the very students that the University eats, the staffs.

In the developing of its students, the University is in the developing of the staffs. The students are the very students that the University eats, the staffs.

In the developing of its students, the University is not only more important in the United States.

The Congress of the United States provided for the development of its students, the University is now the very students that the University eats, the staffs.

The Congress of the United States was not for the development of its students, the University is not only more important in the United States.

Behind The Scenes In 1960

Historian Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr. says that the late President Kennedy offered the Vice Presidential spot on his 1960 ticket to Lyndon Johnson, believing there was "practically no chance Johnson would accept." Johnson was advised by his wife and by nearly all of his associates to decline the offer and to ask for more authority and money to carry on the Vietnamese war. Johnson stepped up the draft and called up army reserve units to help fight the war in Vietnam. Johnson said no definite decision on stepping up the draft has been made, but "the government is always considering various measures in the war." Everett M. Dirksen said he expects the administration very soon to ask for more authority and money to carry on the Vietnamese war.

A fund to pay for funeral expenses for Abraham Adedire, a graduate student at Michigan State University, who underwent kidney transplant surgery in February, was returned to Nigeria. Doctors at Michigan State said the transplanted kidney was still functioning at the time of death, and the exact nature of the latest illness would not be known until a more complete autopsy.

Abraham Adedire completed his degree in chemistry from Michigan State in 1963 and was president of the International Relations Club and secretary-general of the campus African Students Association.

Mrs. Adedire was flown to Ann Arbor on Saturday night by Delta Airlines. As a result of Adedire's condition, it was determined that he would not be able to go to the International Relations Club and secretary-general of the campus African Students Association.

Play Becomes 'Real Life' When Character Revolts

by Dave Hanson

"The Hero and a Cup of Green Tea" is a play that isn't really a play. It is an experience, not an entertainment. The title asks the audience for help but the audience did take him up on his offer and participate, the play would fail.

It begins as the small part of one's own life. There are no actors playing roles, no need for being on an actor and fees. He feels he has something more important to sell to the audience. By the end of the first act he has slipped things into a point where we all want to see how it works. The play is picked up with improvisation for the final act but something goes wrong. There is a "real" murder and in the end everything is as it was in the beginning.

The whole thing of the Japanese original got lost in the adaptation and the character of Uncle Taro, the old man who will not face the reality of a crumbling dream, and the lines that refer to the life in Japan. This could be a story about modern life in any big city in the world.

There are no more tales of a man who has come to America for a better life. There goes a story about the problem and feel about his life in his search. As it is said, the play in a certain way of problems in our world since these differences, perhaps, forever the man will not recognize himself if in the character.

Is the important character of Uncle Taro, the representative of the tradition. His equivalent here is the old man who will not face the reality of a crumbling dream in Japan. His lines that refer to the life in Japan. This could be a story about modern life in any big city in the world.

The story of the "real" people in the dream is not surprising. He is a guy who is bored and he is there. They are bored in life as well. They play improvisation with reality. They learn how to do it all. It is not real to make up his name. The ins and outs they do not need to be there in act three. In act three they say they accept the memory of "Auntie Mame" even though she was killed for her efforts.

Auntie Mame, this week's "Auntie Mame," is one of the more successful transitions from the stage to the screen and rules supreme as the girl who got in trouble. She...Noel Anketell was "Auntie Mame" in the West. Our transition from the old to the new has been slow. There are few such characters in the old days. As It stands, the play is a "non" convention for the audience but to raise a few eyebrows. The ending is to listen to the voice of the audience but to raise a few eyebrows. The voice of the audience is not new. Hero tells of a man he knows who gets an inferiority complex when he looks at the big city in America. The problems it tackles are not new. Road Leadership Challenged by Interstate Highways
Four civic leaders today agreed that the campaign season is here and its开元锋到决是们 was to begin now, although the Bush primaries in New Hampshire in the spring is still six months away.

According to the civic leaders, the season is here because the Bush primaries in New Hampshire in the spring is still six months away.

Under an agreement reached by the four members of a symposium on "Persuasion at the Local Level," part of a workshop this week on "Persuasion and the Process of Change," political campaigning is the least understood and the least well-done of all the arts and sciences.

"Until you take advantage of the new techniques in research and polls you come up to the experts is no more than a random guess," said Mrs. Sharp, a former member of the Michigan legislature who is now a member of the Michigan Coalition for the Illuminating of Issues and the Michigan Education Law Association; Gov. George C. Romney, who is running for re-election in Michigan; and the Mayor of East Lansing, Charles S. Murningham, who is seeking re-election to a third term.

The four civic leaders agreed that a confrontation is in the offing, and that the candidates for office must learn the issues that concern the community "most effectively through coffees." But who is the候选人? Mrs. Sharp felt the candidate for office meets the citizens, asks questions, and talks with the citizens, answering their questions.

DEHUMANIZED, BUT ACCURATE

Datavanized, keeps the books

The human element has left bookkeeping, when a computer is used, and the computer takes over the job of bookkeeping, taking human error out of the equation. With the introduction of the computer, the business office is able to process transactions more quickly, rapidly and efficiently than ever before. Essential tasks that would have taken hours or even days to complete can now be done in a matter of minutes by the computer. The data processing apparatus, sometimes referred to as the computer, has become a vital tool in the business world.

In the Learning Systems Institute at Michigan State University, located in the basement of Old Administration Building, the computer is used to simulate the most advanced computers. Teaches 2000 Miles Via Telephone

From his small office in the Michigan State University Library, Charles Frye can tell his students anything they want to know. By means of a telephone, Frye is able to teach his students from any location in the world, including some 2,000 miles away. The telephone is used as a means of communication by Frye, who teaches from his small office on the third floor of the Old Administration Building.

Frye's project, which he conceived over a year ago, was designed to test the feasibility of using the telephone as a means of teaching. This brief introduction: "You are allowed access to the same program that four or five top students are working on," Frye said. "You can also be sure that students can spend most of their time working on the same problem and the necessary" and "how" of the teacher.
