All State Colleges Aim of Program

Grievances And Hirings

Michigan Democrats have launched a campaign seeking to strengthen their political influence over this state's colleges and universities.

Their initial effort is underway at Michigan State University.

The power struggle here extends to the faculty, the administration, and the Board of Trustees. If it is successful, it will be tried at other state institutions.

One of the steps in the campaign was to organize a meeting of the faculty June 17. In his invitation to selected faculty members, Zolton A. Wulf, Democratic State Central Committee chairman, said that one of the objectives was to "create a Committee of the Democratic Party in Michigan--from members of the public universities and colleges, the boards of control, and other party members."

Wulf, a former Michigan AFL-CIO official, has been an active participant in public relations for the Democratic Party, and director of public affairs for the Michigan Citizens Defense Fund. (He appointed his position to the MSU faculty, in a public relations director for the Michigan highway commission.)

When Wulf first applied for a MSU teaching job, he was turned down. The Department of Journalism could have offered the

Library Moving Books

Students moving in to campus this fall will find significant changes in the library's reference centers.

The Student Librarian was informed that the new locations, under the administration of Miss Colleen B. Kedar, assistant director of libraries, includes the new call numbers, new reference materials, and an expanded reference service.

The school's new call numbers, which can be obtained in the library's new catalog, include 321 different categories and are designed to be used with the school's new library system.

The new call numbers are expected to save students a great deal of time and effort in finding books.

To provide better service for students, the library is offering an expanded reference service.

The service is expected to save students much of the time and effort in finding books.

The library will also have a new book card catalogue in the new reference service.

The card catalogue will be available to all students in the school's new reference service.

The success of the federal government's U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) programs is based on the diffusion of innovations in agriculture, such as the use of fertilizers, new crops, and improved techniques. These programs are designed to reach rural areas, where villages have been most difficult to reach with programs of directed social change. Programs of change include research in communication so they can reach farmers and Indians in how to do better work. Rogers and his associates are called "Diffusion of Innovations" researchers. They have established Brazil, Niger, India, and various countries in the Middle East, Asia, and Africa as major diffusion and adoption of new ideas. The program is completed.

The next step is to initiate various programs to train Brazilians, Nigerians, and other workers anywhere who want to know how much and where to use new ideas. Rogers said that the project will be completed in three phases. Please note, slightly altered in this, they will be published in a book to be written and released.

Campus Bus Service Plans

No Changes For Fall Term

The MSU bus service finds no need to reshuffle its routes for the fall because of the increased ridership, and no new buses will be added for the fall term. However, because the number of passengers for each bus is still increasing, more passenger service is needed.

One of the major complaints of the MSU bus riders is the service's inefficiency. A number of passengers have complained that the buses are too crowded, and the MSU bus service has received many requests for more passenger service.

Renee Jolman, director of the Office of Water Resources Research of the Department of Interior, said at a recent conference on natural resource development, "If their figures indicate we are getting more loads than we need, we can add service and continue the new passenger service, if necessary, if we have to add more immediately."

"We can't follow any rule because the University keeps expanding. Things aren't the same this year as they were last year, Jolman said.
