Sorority Blaze Destroys Room

A fire completely destroyed a room in Delta Zeta sorority house and killed two students, according to Captain George D. Alford, junior vice-president of the Student Union. The fire was believed to have been caused by an electric heater, which was being used to warm the room.

One of the victims was a student named Mary Jane Smith, who was reportedly in the room with her friend, Betty Jones, when the fire started. The other victim is a student named John Williams, who was found in the room. Both students were members of the sorority.

The fire started in the room and quickly spread to other parts of the house. The students living in the house were able to evacuate the building safely.

Sukarno Chops Big Red Fear

SUKARNO—President Sukarno of Indonesia chopped the fear of revolution on Saturday, during a high-level conference in Jakarta. This is the first time that the Indonesian president has publicly declared his confidence in the country's stability.

Sukarno's speech came as a surprise to many observers, who expected him to warn of potential threats. However, the president's message was received with enthusiasm by the people of Indonesia, who have been living in fear of communist-led revolutions.

Hard Fight Predicted For Vote On Radio

AMIBC officials have expressed skepticism that the current radio referendum can be considered a true national vote. They argue that the referendum is biased and unfair.

AMIBC officials have also expressed concern that the current referendum is not representative of the entire population. They believe that the referendum is being used as a tool to silence critics and maintain control.

French Leader Blasts NATO Role

Vieet Nationalization Demanded; 1969 Set As Vieet Deadline

The capital, which was claimed by the Viet Cong, was lost last week. The victory, which was achieved through a well-coordinated attack, has been hailed by many as a significant turnaround in the war.

In his speech, the French leader called for the immediate withdrawal of all American forces from Viet Nam. He also demanded that the United Nations take over the war effort.

The French government has been under increasing pressure to withdraw its forces from Viet Nam. The President, however, has refused to do so, arguing that a withdrawal would be seen as a sign of weakness.

On the other hand, the French leader has been criticized for his hardline stance. Many argue that his policies have only served to prolong the war.

Governor George Wallace of Alabama, in a recent speech, warned that a withdrawal could lead to civil unrest and a breakdown of law and order.

Governor Wallace expressed concern about the potential for violence if the war were to end. He argued that a peaceful withdrawal would be preferable to a sudden and uncontrolled end of the conflict.

Wallace also stressed the importance of maintaining a strong military presence in the region. He argued that a withdrawal could lead to a loss of influence and a decline in the United States' role as a global leader.

On the other hand, many argue that the war is a lost cause and that a withdrawal would be the best option. They argue that continued military involvement in Viet Nam only serves to prolong the conflict and cause unnecessary loss of life.

The debate over the future of the war in Viet Nam continues to be a major issue in American politics. The President and the Congress are divided on how to proceed, with some calling for a withdrawal and others arguing for continued military involvement.

The issue is also a major concern for the American people, who are increasingly tired of the war and its costs.

The French leader's call for nationalization of Viet Nam and the setting of 1969 as a deadline for nationalization has been met with mixed reactions. Some argue that it is a radical and unrealistic demand, while others see it as a realistic and necessary step.

On the other hand, the French leader's hardline stance has been criticized for its potential to escalate the conflict and lead to a further deterioration of the situation.

A community-wide effort is underway to promote peace and understanding in the region. The efforts include community meetings, workshops, and other initiatives aimed at fostering dialogue and cooperation.

The efforts are seen as important in breaking down the barriers of distrust and fear that have been a major obstacle to progress in the region.

The situation in Viet Nam remains tense, with both sides continuing to fight for control of the region. The outcome of the conflict is uncertain, and the future of the region depends on the actions of the parties involved.

Campus Radio Network Deserves Student Support

AFTER ALMOST TWO YEARS of planning, a proposal for an all-campus radio network of dormitory residents give them their approval. A referendum will be held Thursday with only students living in dormitory halls eligible to vote.

The idea has been around since the beginning of the fall semester. The Board of Student Agencies claims that it would approve the station, a sizable majority of all students living in residence halls must vote and the student body will not be allowed to vote in a student election.

One point cited against the campus network is that there would be a limited audience. This is the case, but college students do not need public signals to find out the news or entertainment. Students living in dormitories would only have to listen to the station to get news as well as entertainment. A limited audience does not mean that the station could not have a limited audience and a limited audience could have a limited audience of students. This is the case of the campus network.

The proposal will be considered public service and a public service could not make the station a business. The proposal is that the station would be a public service and the public service would not have to pay for it. The station would be kept in place for a small expense, and, if those expenses have to be met, it would be met by the student's living in dormitories.

The Board of Student Agencies claims that the station would not make a profit, but if it does not make a profit it is not a public service and, therefore, it cannot be considered a public service.

Desperate Cagers, Illini Battle Here Tonight

Title Hopes, 2nd Place Hinge On Outcome

B. BOB HORTING
State News Sports Writer

Joseph Blondel's heart pounded, and he was sweating, but he didn't want to show it. He was in the hotel lobby, getting ready to leave for the airport. The Illinois basketball team was flying back to Champaign on a plane that would arrive in a few minutes. Blondel had been a member of the team for three years, and he knew this was the biggest game of his career. The Illini were playing for the national championship, and the outcome would determine whether they would get a share of the Big Ten title.

But Blondel wasn't feeling confident. His team had lost the previous game, and he knew they couldn't afford another loss. He looked around the lobby, trying to find someone to talk to, but everyone was too busy or too nervous to talk to him.

Suddenly, he felt a hand on his shoulder. It was Coach Kenyon, the Illinois basketball coach. Kenyon was smiling at Blondel, and he put his arm around him.

"Don't worry," he said. "You've got this. Just focus on the game. We're going to win." Kenyon was a legend on the Illinois basketball team. He had been coaching for over 20 years, and he had brought the team to the national championship game twice.

Blondel took a deep breath and nodded. "Thanks, Coach," he said. "I'll try my best." Kenyon gave him a pat on the back and walked off.

Blondel turned to his teammates and gave them a nod of encouragement. They were all looking at him, and some of them were starting to sweat. Blondel knew they were nervous, but he also knew they were capable. He had been on the team for three years, and he knew they could win.

"Let's do this," he said. "We can do this." He took a deep breath and walked out of the lobby. He knew this was the biggest game of his career, and he wasn't going to let his teammates down. He was going to give it his all, and he was going to win.
